For Release in PM's Friday, February 3rd:

Notre Dame, Ind., Feb. 5 — Dr. Edward Teller, noted nuclear physicist who helped develop the world's first atomic bomb, will deliver the fourth lecture in the 1966-67 "Challenges in Science Lectures" series at the University of Notre Dame Monday night.

Dr. Teller will speak on "Atomic Energy" at 7 p.m. in the auditorium of the Center for Continuing Education. The lecture series, which is supported by a grant from the Arthur J. Schmitt Foundation of Chicago, has brought to the Notre Dame campus in the current school year such notable scientists as Dr. Linus Pauling and Dr. Albert V. Crewe.

The address by Dr. Teller will be preceded by a dinner with selected students and certain faculty members. Following the formal lecture, there will be an informal mixer that will be attended by Dr. Teller, students and faculty.

Dr. Emil Hofman, assistant Dean of the College of Science and the director of the lecture series, said the series is designed "to provide a broad view of science with emphasis on the challenges that confront the scientist in his efforts to add to the store of knowledge and to contribute to the welfare of mankind."

Dr. Teller, a native of Hungary who became a citizen of the United States in 1941, continued to work on nuclear weapons after the development of the atomic bomb, the destruction of Hiroshima and the end of World War II. He explained that he continued his work "in the firm belief that there are many unexplored applications of nuclear energy," and because he felt that the U. S. would need advanced weapons to successfully oppose "future dangers."

Teller...two

After the Second World War, Dr. Teller made significant contributions to the development of atomic weapons, and helped design the world's first hydrogen bomb. He was a member of the General Advisory Committee of the United States Atomic Energy Commission from 1956 to 1958. He helped establish the nation's second weapons laboratory at Livermore, California, and he served as director of the Livermore Laboratory from 1958 to 1960.

He has returned to the academic life as professor-at-large of physics at the University of California. His present activities are connected with the applications of nuclear energy; he also works in astrophysics and in molecular physics. Dr. Teller has also concerned himself with the teaching of elementary science and applied science on the graduate level.

Born in Budapest in 1908, Dr. Teller received his university education in Germany. He was awarded his Ph.D. from the University of Leipzig in 1930. He came to the United States following research and teaching assignments in Denmark and England in the early 1930's.

Dr. Teller was a professor of physics at George Washington University, Washington, from 1935 to 1941. His wartime assignments took him from Columbia University to the University of Chicago and then to the University of California in 1952.

He is the co-author of The Structure of Matter. Dr. Teller is the author of Our Nuclear Future; The Legacy of Hiroshima, and The Reluctant Revolutionary.

The new one-story buff brick building is the fourth U. S. post office to be erected in Notre Dame's 125-year history. Through the instrumentality of Henry Clay, the University's first post office was established in 1851, and the founder and then president of Notre Dame, Rev. Edward Sorin, C.S.C., was appointed the first postmaster by President Millard Fillmore. With the growth of Notre Dame, two more post offices were built, the most recent in 1934. The new building is more than twice as large as the 33-year-old structure. The Notre Dame post office, which also serves nearby Saint Mary's College, has a monthly volume of up to one million pieces of mail and annual receipts totaling $368,153.

For Release PM's Friday, Feb. 17:

Notre Dame, Ind., Feb. 16 — Gen. William C. Westmoreland, commander of the United States Military Assistance Command in Viet Nam, today was named the 14th recipient of the annual Patriotism Award of the University of Notre Dame senior class.

Educated at the Citadel and the U. S. Military Academy, Westmoreland was commanding general of the 18th Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, N. C., from 1960 to his appointment in 1963 as head of the United States military effort in Viet Nam. The internationally known four-star general has received several medals and decorations for military valor.

Westmoreland will be unable to attend the award ceremony in person, so the traditional Washington's Birthday Exercises at which the recipient usually speaks will not be held this year, according to Patrick Nash, Chicago, Ill., president of the senior class. Instead the award will be given to a representative of Westmoreland at a private dinner Tuesday (Feb. 21) in The Morris Inn. The senior class has received no notification as yet of who Westmoreland's representative will be.

The American flag, traditionally presented to the University by the senior class at the Washington's Birthday Exercises, will be presented at the dinner. The flag is flown for the first time on the seniors' June commencement day.

Westmoreland was chosen by members of the senior class who vote each year to select an outstanding American for the honor.

Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.), the Senate minority leader, was the 1966 recipient. Other winners have included Adlai Stevenson, Richard Nixon, John F. Kennedy (when a senator), J. Edgar Hoover, and Robert Kennedy.

For Immediate Release:

Notre Dame, Ind., Feb. 9—A survey of political ideologies in Latin American reveals a growing importance of the Christian-social parties, according to one expert observer.

Writing in the current Review of Politics, a quarterly published by the University of Notre Dame, Prof. Donald W. Bray notes the growth of a "new type of Catholic party stumping the New World under the banner of Christian socialism."

Bray, an associate professor of government in California State College in Los Angeles, cites the rise of the Chilean Christian Democrats who have projected a model of state capitalism while rejecting the Marxist notion of class struggle.

Christian-social parties are active in 16 Latin-American countries, according to Bray, and possess an important "mystique provided by religious inspiration" while carefully avoiding Church dictation of political policies.

While such parties as the Chilean Christian Democratic Party are now in the political forefront in Latin America, the author warns that continued "compromises with entrenched interests" may lead them to the political Right.

Among other conclusions of Bray in his survey of the "ten most important" political ideologies of Latin America are the following:

The Socialist Parties—Split doctrinally between Marxism and welfare-state socialism, they have little impact outside of Chile (where they contend for power), Uruguay, and Argentina.

The Fascist Parties—"The outcome of World War II so discredited fascism that it has ceased to be an important ideology...with the possible exception of Argentina where the son of Adolf Eichmann heads a strident Neo-Nazi movement."

The Peronist-Nasserist Parties—When Peron fled into exile in 1955, Peronism ceased to have a viable political appeal outside of Argentina. It has reappeared in Brazil, Peru, and Columbia in a form usually identified as Nasserism which attracts middle-class military men who would utilize the armed forces to forge a socialist transformation of society.

The Fidelista Parties—Outside of Cuba, Fidelismo has not developed a popular base in any major urban areas of Latin America. Fidelistas have taken to isolated rural areas in Venezuela, Colombia, Peru, and Guatemala to seek support of the peasants, but are "far from being a real contender for power in Latin America."

Notre Dame, Ind., Feb. 25—An intensified interest in contemporary non-Thomistic points of view is evident in the program for the American Catholic Philosophical Association's 41st annual meeting March 27-29 at the University of Notre Dame.

The theme of the meeting, expected to be attended by some 800 persons in the University's Center for Continuing Education, is "The Nature of Philosophical Inquiry." Three principal positions on this topic will be represented by papers to be given at the opening plenary session March 28 by the Rev. George Klubertanz, S. J., of St. Louis University, a traditional Thomist; Richard Rorty, Princeton University, representative of the linguistic-analytic approach; and the Rev. Robert Johann, S.J., Loyola Seminary, Shrub Oak, N. Y., of the personalist-existentialist school.

Rorty is one of a half-dozen non-Catholic philosophers participating in the meeting at the invitation of the Association, according to its president, the Rev. Ernan McMullin, head of the department of philosophy at Notre Dame. Other Non-Catholic philosophers on the program are Peter Bertocci, Boston University; Errol Harris, Northwestern University; John MacQuarrie, Union Theological Seminary; Langdon Gilkey, University of Chicago School of Divinity; and Andrew Reck, Tulane University.

Sectional meetings on March 28 and 29 will take up topics in philosophical psychology, the history of philosophy, ethics, the philosophy of nature, and the philosophy of religion.

More attention than has been customary will be paid to the philosophy of religion, Father McMullin noted. Both Protestant and Catholic philosophers and theologians will be discussing such questions as "What Does the Theologian Expect of the Philosopher?" The Rev. John Dunne, C.S.C., a well-known Notre Dame theologian, will deliver a paper on "The Metamorphoses of Faith."

The Rev. Bernard Lonergan, S. J., whose writings have drawn an international audience, will participate in a special symposium on his notion of philosophical inquiry. Other participants include Michael Novak, Stanford University, and the Rev. David Burrell, C.S.C., of Notre Dame.

The Association's dinner, scheduled for March 28, will include a talk by Father McMullin and the presentation of the Aquinas-Spellman award to the Rev. Martin D'Arcy, an English Jesuit now at Boston College. The award is given periodically by the Association to honor premier achievement in Catholic philosophy.

For Release PM's Friday, Feb. 24:

Notre Dame, Ind., Feb. 24—"There is no true alternative to collective bargaining but compulsion," a corporation official told a union-management conference today (Feb. 24) at the University of Notre Dame.

Speaking before 600 persons at the University's 15th annual conference on pending issues in collective bargaining, E. D. Mairs, vice president in charge of personnel and industrial relations for Aluminum Company of America, said that both unions and management have a stake in the preservation of collective bargaining, which he called "a traditional keystone in the operation of the private enterprise idea."

"True collective bargaining carries the possibilities of enormous public inconveniences and serious, sometimes sudden economic dislocations," Mairs noted. "But it cannot be perpetually modified by expedient treatments that erode its very purpose," he said, citing such devices as government seizure and compulsory arbitration.

Mairs said the future of collective bargaining rests on recognition of such matters as the "mutual dependence of management and labor in a business endeavor, the competitive factors within which a company must do business, the fact that improvements in wages and benefits must come from the generation of more wealth by the business, and the principle of settling of the issues by the bargaining parties themselves."

The problem of how local issues can be resolved in bargaining was discussed by Paul J. Burnsky, Grand Lodge representative of the International Association of Machinists (IAM). He said local issue bargaining "is compounded of elements of custom, institutional structure, and the relative strength of the parties." While rejecting a return to plant-by-plant bargaining as "utter nonsense," union-management conference...2

Burnsky advocated a pragmatic approach which would allow each major industry to find out "what works" for it. As an example, he mentioned the "multi-level collective bargaining" done by the IAM in which a national agreement and supplemental local issues are worked out concurrently at a national negotiations meeting.

Among trends in vacation and holiday issues seen by Irving Bluestone, administrative assistant to United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther, and V. R. D'Alessandro, director of industrial relations for Sinclair Oil Company, were an increase in the number of yearly paid holidays to the nine authorized now in a few contracts, more "long weekends" in connection with national holidays, and improvement in premium pay for holiday work.

Bluestone said the two three-day weekend holidays for Christmas and New Year's in 1966 might eventually evolve into a "winter respite" weeklong vacation for laborers.
