International Schools

Schools with a difference

New Era School, Panchgani, India

New Era is an international, Bahá'í, co-educational school which aims through moral and academic excellence to develop in students the spirit of service to mankind. It is affiliated to the C.B.S.E. (New Delhi), and the University of London for ³O² Level courses.

A universal, morals curriculum teaches prayers, virtues, healthy attitudes, values and altruistic service. With a dedicated staff and nearly 800 students from India and 28 other countries, the school is a place of beautiful diversity. Because the school is very strict in some areas there is no problem of smoking, drugs, alcohol, violence and other immoral conduct. The students are guided to choose proper moral behaviour. A cheerful family atmosphere pervades the campus.

A special Remedial Section with small classes and groups provides more individualized instruction for students needing extra help in core subjects like language, math and science. Within a few months to maximum one academic year, students come up to mainstream standards.

Cooperative learning and peer tutoring approaches are used. Educational video and computer programmes enhance the class teaching.

Regular computer classes for across the board provide a good foundation for future employment and pursuit of higher studies. (E-mail and internet access are also available to the students.)

Vocational classes develop in students practical knowledge and skills; also disciplined work experience. Some of the classes include: advanced computer, baking, gardening, wood working, art and sculpture, beauty culture, screen printing, ceramics, welding and metal work, and basic electronics.

Students visit the surrounding areas of mountains and rivers, dense forests and farms, temples, factories, dams, as well as educational sites in nearby towns and cities; e.g. , Poona (Pune) and Mumbai. They also go for trekking, camping and swimming with staff supervision.
