MAKING UP THE NUMBERS

Which airframer has the most narrowbodies in service? What is the fastest-growing regional type? Is the 777 still the most popular widebody? Our annual data snapshot of the global airliner market reveals all

MURDO MORRISON LONDON
DATA ANALYSIS ANTOINE FAFARD

There are many fronts in the commercial war between the big two airframers. In one crucial skirmish – size of global single-aisle in-service fleet – the Airbus A320 family is within a whisker of overtaking the Boeing 737, when old and current-generation types are combined.

Flightglobal's latest annual airliner census – a breakdown of the world's fleet of commercial aircraft by type and operator – shows the number of Airbus narrowbodies grew year-on-year by 8.7% to 5,632. Meanwhile, although numbers of Boeing 737-600/700/800/900 aircraft increased by 10.0% to 4,693, this was offset by a 6.4% decline in the fleet of earlier generation 737s to 1,089.

The latter decrease was smaller than the almost 15% attrition between 2012 and 2013, but the fall means that the number of 737-200/300/400/500 variants are almost certain to drop into three figures by next year.

These numbers, of course, do not take into consideration orders for the 737 Max and A320neo, which are yet to enter service – and on which more later.

The race is also close when it comes to the two top-selling widebodies.

The Boeing 777 is still in the lead, with the global fleet of the twinjet increasing by 8.5% during the year to 1,188 examples.

Meanwhile, the Airbus A330 fleet passed the four-figure mark, growing by 10.0% to 1,020 aircraft, from 927 in 2013.

Both airframers reaffirmed their confidence in their most popular twin-aisle products during the past 12 months, with Boeing unveiling the 777X at Dubai in November, and Airbus announcing the re-engined A330neo – both backed with impressive commitments.

The A320 family is close to overtaking the 737 in terms of size of global single-aisle in-service fleet

AIRLINER FLEET DISTRIBUTION

SOURCE: Ascend Fleets from Flightglobal (July 2014)

Boeing's newest widebody, the 787, continues to make its mark, with in-service aircraft reaching 163, including the first -9 example – more than double last year's total of 68.

With production of the Dreamliner currently at a rate of 10 a month, this number should grow to close to 300 by next year's census.

On the other hand, the 747-8 total is increasing slowly, from 44 to 62 in-service aircraft – the vast majority of them freighters. Retirements of the venerable jumbo are offsetting this growth, however. The 747 remains a top 10 mainline type, but its fleet has fallen from 623 aircraft in 2013 to 585.

Fortunes are less rosy for Airbus when it comes to its other widebody types. Seven years after entry into service with Singapore Airlines, the A380 fleet has reached 136 aircraft – up from 106 last year.

It is a respectable figure, but – with just 167 on order – the superjumbo is still far from the game-changing widebody Toulouse hoped it would be.

Meanwhile, the out-of-production A340 continues to be put out to pasture. With 266 in service – down from 298 last year – the four-engined airliner is the fastest declining type, only just clinging to its top 10 status. »

» Boeing's other legacy aircraft – the 757, 767 and MD-80, together with its related airframes – continue to hold their own in the top 10. The youngest type – the 767 – is unsurprisingly the best performer, with its fleet falling by under 3% to just below the 800 mark. The -300 variant still has orders in the bag.

Declines in the other two fully out-of-production airframes are sharper, although there are still more than 800 757s flying, and – despite a 4.1% year-on-year fall – some 744 Boeing 717/MD-80/MD-90/DC-9 types.

CONSOLIDATION

When it comes to regional aircraft, Embraer is consolidating its position as market leader. An 8.2% year-on-year increase saw the Brazilian manufacturer's E-Jet range pass the 1,000 aircraft milestone in 2014. Even its legacy ERJ line-up saw only a 3.5% decline to 695 aircraft.

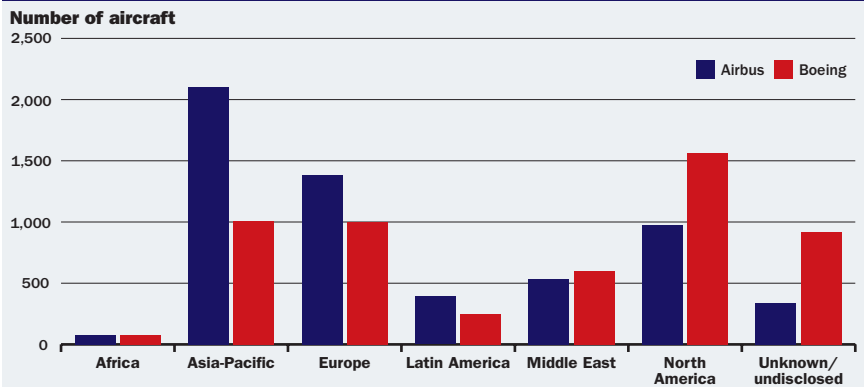

However, things are also not too grim for Embraer's rival Bombardier, with an 11% drop in 50-seat products offset by a 7.5% hike in the CRJ700/900/1000 fleet. With 649 of these in service, the family has overtaken the Canadian airframer's once-ubiquitous CRJ100/200 family, of which there are 640 flying.

Elsewhere in the regional arena, ATR's rebound in fortunes continues, with the fleet of ATR 72s growing by 14.6% to 581 aircraft – compensating for a decline in the number of the smaller ATR 42. Bombardier's rival Dash 8 Q400 turboprop had a less impressive year, with its fleet increasing by 23 to 421. This takes it to just 30 aircraft short of the manufacturer's legacy Dash 8 Q100/200/300 family, which saw a modest 3.1% decline to 451 aircraft.

Veteran types – the de Havilland Canada Twin Otter and Beechcraft 1900 – maintain their top 10 status in this segment.

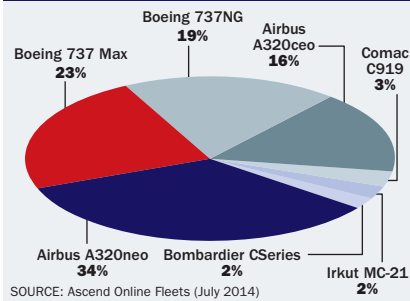

Russian and CIS legacy aircraft continue to decline, with production of many types having ceased or grinding close to a halt as local airlines opt for Western products. The number of Ilyushin Il-76s has fallen from 116 in 2013 to 105 this year, Tupolev Tu-154s from 41 to 36 and Yakovlev Yak-40s from 45 to 32. The sole bright spots for Russian industry are the Sukhoi Superjet 100 – with 28 aircraft in service and 76 orders – and the yet-to-fly Irkut MC-21, which has a backlog of 92 aircraft.

DOMINATING

The regional breakdown of the global fleet remains the same as last year, with Europe and Asia-Pacific both with a 25% share, behind North America's 32%. However, when it comes to the backlog for Airbus and Boeing products, Asia-Pacific dominates, with 3,111 orders out of a total of 5,812. Two-thirds of the region's commitments are for Airbus aircraft. Toulouse also enjoys an advantage when it comes to European orders, although Boeing has more than two-fifths of orders from North American airlines.

Speed of retirements aside, orderbooks offer an indication of the likely shape of the world fleet over the next decade. The A320neo continues to lead the 737 Max in terms of backlog by around 1,000 aircraft. However, perhaps the flip side of Airbus's success is that the 737NG is ahead of the A320ceo – although by a much narrower amount. New players – Comac, Irkut and Bombardier with its CSeries – have yet to make much of an impression. Their combined backlog makes up just 7% of the market. ■

Seven years after entry into service with Singapore Airlines, the A380 fleet has reached 136 aircraft

EXPLANATORY NOTES

This census data covers all commercial jet and turboprop-powered transport aircraft in service or on firm order with airlines worldwide, excluding aircraft that carry fewer than 14 passengers or equivalent cargo. It records the fleets of Western, Chinese-built and Russia/CIS/Ukraine-built airliners.

The tables have been compiled by Flightglobal Insight using Flightglobal's Ascend Online Fleets database. The information is correct up to July 2014 and excludes non-airline operators, such as leasing companies and the military. Aircraft are listed in alphabetical order, first by manufacturer and then type. Operators are listed by region, with any aircraft variant in brackets next to the operator's name.

Fleet data comprises the in-service fleet and, where applicable, the outstanding firm orders in parentheses in the right-hand column.

On the Ascend database, an airliner is defined as being "in service" if it is "active" (in other words accumulating flying hours). An aircraft is classified as "parked" if it is known to be inactive – for example, if it is grounded because of airworthiness requirements or in storage – and when flying hours for three consecutive months are reported as zero. Aircraft undergoing maintenance or awaiting conversion are also counted as being parked.

The region is dictated by operator base and does not necessarily indicate the area of operation. Options and letters of intent (where a firm contract has not been signed) are not included. Orders by, and aircraft with, leasing companies and holding companies such as China Aviation Supplies are excluded, unless a confirmed end-user is known – in which case the aircraft is shown against the airline concerned. Operators' fleets include leased aircraft.
