Aquatic Activities at PCC

Elisha Stasko (N.Y.) kayaks on Perdido Bay.

College classes usually include teachers, textbooks, lectures, notes, and exams; but some classes have a different twist. PCC students can learn to sail a catamaran or maneuver a kayak. At West Campus, located 18 miles from the main campus on beautiful Perdido Bay, students learn basic sailing skills and then experience the unforgettable thrill of catamaran racing and kayak races, treks, and obstacle courses.

“Safety is always a priority,” says Dr. Dennis Martin, aquatics director. “Everyone wears a life jacket, regardless of his sailing ability. We don’t take chances with the weather or the water.” Dr. Martin has taught physical education classes at PCC for 16 years. His wife, Pennie, is the College registrar.

On campus, students can take swimming, diving, lifeguarding, and water safety instruction classes at the Swim Center. They can compete in relays and water polo matches. They also can become certified in CPR and first aid. This experience is invaluable, especially to students who lifeguard at summer camps and other activities. 🏊

Reaching the World for Christ

PCC Missions Conference 2000

Go reach the world, touch one more soul;
Bring one more lamb back to the fold.
Each soul another flag unfurled,
Each voice another chance to reach the world.
—Mark Bishop

Missions Conference 2000 opened with the stirring pageantry of the Parade of Nations. Over 240 international students, many in native dress, were vivid reminders of the need to reach the world for Christ. Over thirty guest missionaries and fifteen mission board representatives shared their burden for missions that God had placed on their hearts. Powerful messages by guest speakers emphasized tremendous opportunities to reach the world through evangelism. Many students surrendered their lives to full-time ministry. Guest speakers were Dr. Don Sisk, president/general director of Baptist International Missions; Dr. James Earls, director of Baptist Home Missions black church planting; and Dr. Mike Patterson, president/general director of Mount Abarim Baptist Evangelistic Association. ☞

Advertising/public relations

equals unlimited opportunities

Alan reviews his organization's newly printed materials.

▲ Alan McGuirt serves as the staff designer for International Board of Jewish Missions, Inc., Chattanooga, Tenn.

The great thing about advertising is developing different skills that work together (writing, art, and marketing) to create an effective promotion," says Alan McGuirt ('96 PCC grad). "The advertising/public relations major combines art, business, and speech in one major."

A career in advertising/public relations offers unlimited opportunities. Many PCC advertising/public relations graduates own businesses; some are graphic designers, executives for marketing companies, members of human resource development teams, project managers for news publications, communications coordinators for businesses and organizations; and others work in countless settings.

Jeff Sellers ('93) graduated from PCC with a degree in advertising/public relations, and he currently serves as an account executive with FolioGroup in Delaware, a company that supports client marketing efforts in trade show exhibit design and implementation. Jeff says, "God needs people who will take a stand for Him in today's fast-paced world and promote the Christian faith as a positive, exciting way to live. PCC armed me with the confidence, morals, values, and integrity to deal each day in a business environment."

"Every business has its own unique needs, and our graduates are well equipped to help meet those needs," says faculty member Mr. Aaron Ebert. Students work with cutting-edge technology and computer applications to build strong graphic design skills. They also learn other vital skills that are assets in any profession:

- Relating well to others
- Communicating effectively in a variety of mediums and settings
- Solving challenges creatively
- Conducting themselves in a professional manner

Students strengthen their skills through on-campus practical assignments like designing and selling ads for the commencement fine arts production's playbill. Each year advertising/public relations students work with local businesses, securing vendors for the PCC soccer championship. They also design and create promotional items like T-shirts, flyers, and posters. Classes provide constant practice in speaking and salesmanship, helping students build confidence and generating success. "It's exhilarating to work on projects with classmates," says Stephi (Cyr, '98) Lemon. "Sharing ideas and helpful suggestions can make small ideas grow into something wonderful." By going beyond their comfort level, students gain a sense of accomplishment.

Students build strong graphic design skills by using up-to-date equipment and applications.

David Ryan ('95) is partner and vice president of production at High Resolutions, Inc., in Knoxville, Tenn. He describes his company, a digital service bureau, as a one-stop solution to virtually any promotional need. "Every class I took at PCC was beneficial in some way," he comments. "Every day I was surrounded by Biblical instruction for living out every role I have. The training for life was even more important than the superior training for my profession."

Wrestlers Claim National Title

PCC Eagles wrestlers competed in the National Collegiate Wrestling Association Tournament and claimed the national title for the second year in a row. Coach Jim Hazewinkel, in his ninth year as PCC's wrestling coach, was named "Coach of the Year." Wrestlers represented 33 schools around the country, including the University of Georgia, Yale University, University of Texas, Georgia Tech, Auburn University, and Louisiana State University. Senior Matt Fitch (Ariz.) was national champion in his weight class, winning the individual national title at 174 lbs.

Multipurpose auditorium under construction

In May 1999, PCC broke ground for a new 297,000-square-foot multipurpose auditorium. The new building is located on Main Drive across from the Sports Center. It will be approximately twice the size of the existing 122,000-square-foot Dale Horton Auditorium, which will continue to function as part of the campus fine arts complex.

A stream flowing between two reflecting pools will mark the auditorium's main entrance. The stream symbolizes the river of life in Rev. 22:1. Inside, the 6,000-seat auditorium will be used for college chapel, Campus Church services, and other occasions. Two small chapels will each seat 100 people. A grand staircase in the foyer leads to the balcony. The building will also house a large rehearsal stage and a baby nursery.

The main auditorium will incorporate a number of high-tech features:

- An 18' x 24' magnification screen above the pulpit, allowing those seated in back to have a better view of the speaker and events on the platform;
- A two-story, 110-foot revolving platform with a choir loft on one side and a rehearsal stage on the other. The platform rotates in eight minutes, giving more flexibility in scheduling back-to-back events;

- Sliding partitions dividing the area below the balcony into three 600-seat lecture rooms;
- Suspended adjustable ceiling panels to enhance acoustics and facilitate recording of performances.

"We are very excited about the new auditorium," says Dr. Greg Mutsch, vice president for administration. "It will provide an all-around excellent experience aesthetically, technically, spiritually, and academically." The new multipurpose auditorium will be a welcome addition on PCC's campus. ☪

Architect's model

The new multipurpose auditorium will contain:

- enough sheet rock to cover 20 football fields
- 830,000 bricks
- 242 miles of electrical wiring
- 61.2 miles of conduit (metal pipes housing electrical wires)
- 17,540 electrical outlets

From the President

Arlin Horton
President/Founder

After visiting PCC, a youth pastor in South Carolina wrote to share his impressions:

I just wanted to write a quick note of thanks for a wonderful experience at College Days. I had not been to your campus in several years and was impressed with the facilities that you have now. Everything was done first class, and everyone involved with PCC treated us in a wonderful manner. All of the teenagers who went with our group loved it, and some of them are definitely planning on attending PCC after they graduate.

Every staff member I talked to at PCC constantly gave glory to God. They did not brag about PCC without bragging about how God has blessed PCC. No one gave credit to anyone but Him, and I liked that very much. Thanks again for a great experience, and we will look forward to doing it again next year.

Recently the following letter came from a student preparing to graduate:

Dear Dr. Horton,

In my state are two Bible colleges. Either one would do in this instance, but I'll only mention one. My friend is looking to graduate from one of them this semester, but as he does, he will have an unfriendly memento of his alma mater—a $15,000 debt.

I'm nearing May 11 and my diploma. Lord willing, I will enter the ministry without a debt. Thank you very much for your generous low cost for college that has made my education financially possible. I am very grateful to have attended this institution, and I owe much to the Lord for His supply through your faithfulness. Thank you.

*Excitedly,
A Pure Student*
