CONFIDENCE IN STATE and LOCAL INSTITUTIONS SURVEY

March 7-8, 12-15, 2007
453 Registered Voters
SME +/- 4.6%

Introduction

The Confidence in State and Local Institutions survey was designed to measure the level of confidence that Alabama registered voters have in state and local institutions and organizations.

Only churches receive a majority rating of “Great Confidence” followed by the medical profession and law enforcement. When “Great Deal of Confidence” and “Some Confidence” are combined, the rankings remain relatively the same.

While there are no extremely high “No Confidence” ratings, the highest “No Confidence” ratings are given to the Christian Coalition, unions and the legal profession. The lowest ratings of “No Confidence” are again given to local small businesses, doctors, banks, community colleges and churches.

When “Low Confidence” and “No Confidence” ratings are combined, the legal profession, nursing homes and the Alabama Legislature receive the highest combined ratings.

Since 1999, while confidence ratings for the medical profession and state government have remained statistically constant, ratings for all other state and local institutions and organizations have declined. The largest decline in confidence ratings, 15% or over, occurred for local private schools and the Christian Coalition, followed by declines of ten points or more for universities, the Alabama Supreme Court, Child Day Care Centers and unions.

Overall, while confidence ratings for both state and national institutions and organizations have declined since 1999, confidence ratings for state institutions and organizations are generally higher across the board than are ratings for national institutions and organizations.

While state government and, in particular, the Legislature, are conventionally disparaged, both have substantial majority combined “Great Deal of Confidence” and “Some Confidence” ratings.
