CHRISTOPHER COHAN
OWNER & MANAGING MEMBER

Christopher Cohan enters his 11th season as owner of the Golden State Warriors - the first 10 of which he served as the sole owner. Additionally, Cohan is in his fourth year as a member of the Advisory/Finance Committee of the NBA Board of Governors. The 54-year-old native of Salinas, California assumed control of the club in January of 1995, and his immediate focus was that of building a championship-caliber basketball team for Warriors fans, while exhibiting his unwavering commitment to the Bay Area business and charitable communities. Soon after assuming control of the NBA franchise, he produced a refurbished state-of-the-art arena, a first-class training facility/administrative office structure (which anchored the rejuvenation of downtown Oakland), and brought one of the world's top sporting spectacles to the Bay Area - NBA All-Star 2000.

Cohan's commitment has not gone unnoticed, and the growing allegiance of Warriors fans and partners has resulted in an increase in average attendance in each of the past four NBA seasons. As a result of the growing fan base, the Warriors have posted a franchise record for attendance in each of the past two seasons (2002-03 & 2003-04), two years after experiencing the largest per game attendance increase in the league (2000-01). The renewed fan interest was jump-started during the 1999-00 season, as Cohan strategically placed the world's focus on the Bay Area when the club hosted NBA All-Star 2000. It marked the second time the event had been staged in the Bay Area (1967) and the third time the franchise had hosted the event (Philadelphia, 1960). In addition to the tremendous economic impact of the event locally, the exposure generated by the game was enormous - it was televised in 37 countries and attracted 276 international journalists from around the world. Cohan's generous contributions - from both a monetary and facility perspective - made an event of this magnitude feasible in Oakland, and served as another example of his positive impact on the Bay Area community during his tenure.

In addition to providing Golden State fans and players with a spectacular new 19,596-seat arena, Cohan was the guiding force behind the construction of a luxurious basketball training facility that was at the forefront of what has become NBA norm. It includes three basketball courts, a spacious weight room, and many other training amenities, and has served as the training site for international basketball competition (USA Basketball, Chinese National Team). Elite college basketball programs Duke, North Carolina, Michigan State, Stanford and Cal are a few to have taken advantage of the venue. During the past five summers the facility has also become home of the ever-expanding Warriors Youth Basketball Camp program. Over 6,000 Bay Area boys and girls have participated in camps held at the NBA club's official practice site during that time.

Cohan was raised by his mother, Helen, an executive secretary, in his native Salinas, California and later moved to Los Gatos. His love affair with the Warriors began in 1962, when the team moved to San Francisco and he personally witnessed the careers of Hall of Famers Wilt Chamberlain, Nate Thurmond and Rick Barry. Shortly after graduating from Arizona State University in 1973, Cohan embarked upon a rewarding career in the cable television industry in Orinda, California, working with Feather River Cable Television Corporation. The experience at Feather River proved invaluable to the cable TV magnate, as he learned the industry from every possible perspective and later applied that knowledge to his own extremely successful and prosperous business.

Less than four years after his introduction into the industry, Cohan formed Sonic Communications in 1977, building the company into one of the largest independently owned cable outlets in the country and, at one time, the largest in Alaska. Twenty-one years later, May 20, 1998, Cohan sold Sonic Communications, which at the time ranked among the top 50 cable television companies in the nation, electing to devote the focus of his energy to his family and the future of the Warriors.

One of the tenets of Cohan's ownership philosophy is the need to be actively involved in the community. Under his leadership, the Warriors and their corporate partners maintain ongoing community programs that address issues from child literacy and education, to neighborhood revitalization. Since the 1998-99 season, Cohan has offered incentive-based programs which encourage all Warriors staff members to volunteer their services in the community. Since that time, Warriors employees have donated more than 6,000 hours to local community organizations and charities.

The Warriors "Read to Achieve" Program, in conjunction with the NBA's league-wide "Read to Achieve" initiative, has worked through approximately 75 libraries and elementary and middle schools to reach Bay Area children, while also developing reading centers and creating an All-Star Reading Team to further promote literacy on a year-round basis. Similarly, thousands of local middle school students are encouraged to improve their attendance, academics and attitude through "Making the Grade," the Warriors' drop-out prevention program now in its fourth year.

The Warriors Foundation is a non-profit foundation designed specifically to assist Bay Area organizations which serve and benefit local youth and families in the areas of education, health and social/cultural enrichment. On St. Patrick's Day, 2001, the Warriors Foundation's Green Tie & Tennis Charity Gala was held at the Warriors Practice Facility and hosted by acclaimed actor and humanitarian Danny Glover. Glover joined Mr. Cohan's wife, Angela, President of the Foundation Board of Directors, in presenting grant recipient's checks totaling $200,000.

In an effort to help those less fortunate, Cohan has remained philanthropically committed to the community through the arts, charities, public radio, children and sports. In 1989 he made a $2.1 million donation for the construction of a Performing Arts Center in San Luis Obispo, California. Demonstrating their appreciation and gratitude, the California State University Board of Trustees unanimously approved the naming of the Christopher Cohan Center on the campus of Cal Poly on September 11, 1996. The magnificent $20 million performing arts facility has a capacity of 1,300 and serves the entire Central California region. Strong supporters of community programs, the Cohan's have been major contributors to numerous Bay Area charities.

In July 2004, Cohan agreed to sell a 20% interest in the team to a group of four highly successful, established and respected local businessmen - Michael Marks (CEO, Flextronics), Jim Davidson (Managing Director, Silver Lake Partners), John Thompson (CEO, Symantec Corporation) and Fred Harman (General Partner, Oak Investment Partners). Prior to this transaction, Cohan was one of only six NBA owners to control 100% interest in a team.

Chris and Angela reside in San Francisco, where they spend most of their free time raising their three children.

ROBERT ROWELL
PRESIDENT

Robert Rowell is currently in his second year as the Warriors' president after being promoted to that position on June 8, 2003 by team owner Christopher Cohan. His responsibilities include directing all aspects of the club's entire management team in its day-to-day business and basketball operations. He also represents the organization as a member of the NBA Board of Governors and serves as the team's NBA chief marketing officer. The 37-year-old native of Alton, Illinois is the youngest executive to occupy his position in the NBA.

In Rowell's first year as president in 2003-04, the Warriors established an all-time single-season franchise record in home attendance, surpassing a mark that had been set the previous season. The record-setting attendance figure, buoyed by a 27-14 home record and an increased commitment to customer service and enhanced fan experience, marked the fourth straight season in which the Warriors have seen an increase in per game attendance. Rowell was also instrumental in the naming of Chris Mullin as executive vice president of basketball operations on April 22, 2004, solidifying the organization with strong leadership and direction in all facets of the business.

Rowell was promoted to his current position after serving two seasons as the club's chief operating officer, during which time he continued to serve as the catalyst in the Warriors steady resurgence in the Bay Area sports business community. He played a major role in the hiring of Mullin as a special assistant in the summer of 2002 and oversaw the renewed excitement of Warriors basketball, both locally and nationally, as the 2002-03 Warriors team finished with the most improved record in the NBA (+17 wins). That excitement allowed the Warriors to renew 92% of their season ticket holders for the 2003-04 campaign and the team ranked second in the NBA in new season tickets sold (trailing only the Cleveland Cavaliers).

Other business accomplishments under Rowell's leadership include increasing ticket revenue each of the past three seasons (including a 14% increase in 2003-04), despite keeping tickets prices the same for six consecutive years. In fact, the Warriors' team payroll doubled (roughly $26 million to $52 million) since the club's previous season ticket price increase in 1998. Additionally, the club has expanded its season ticket holder base by more than 20% over the last four years. From a corporate sponsorship perspective, the Warriors have increased both their number of corporate partners and gross revenue each of the last three years. The Warriors have also been one of the league's most aggressive and successful teams from an e-commerce standpoint. In 2002-03, the Warriors' website -- www.warriors.com -- produced a dramatic 200%-plus increase in revenue generated via the internet (ticket sales, merchandise, etc), the largest such increase in the league.

In the summer of 2003, Rowell created the "In The Paint" program as a company-wide employee-based endeavor, designed to increase season ticket holder retention rates through impeccable customer service. The program calls for every employee in the organization to establish a relationship with designated season ticket holders via personal communication. The program has resulted in staff members visiting homes and businesses of season ticket holders, as well as frequent phone calls and random in-seat visits during Warriors home games.

Prior to serving his tenure as COO, Rowell spent two seasons as the club's vice president of business operations. In that role, Rowell spearheaded the creation of the marketing arm of the Warriors -- Great Time Out Entertainment (GTOE). The branding campaign, "It's A Great Time Out," helped the Warriors earn the distinction of possessing the NBA's highest regular-season attendance increase mark (16.3%) during the 2000-01 season. Following that season he was named one of Street & Smith's Sports Business Journal's Forty Under 40 Award winners. The Forty Under 40 Awards, for which there were over 600 nominations, annually celebrates the achievements of the top 40 executives in sports under the age of 40.

Rowell initially joined the Warriors management team in August of 1995 as assistant controller. He also served as director of finance/controller for two seasons. His responsibilities included handling day-to-day business operations and fiscal management of the club's renovated $110 million arena and $10 million practice facility.

Prior to joining the Warriors, Rowell worked for his alma mater Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo in the Intercollegiate Athletics Department for six years. He spent three years (1989-91) as business manager before being promoted to assistant athletics director in 1992, and an associate athletics director in 1994. During his tenure, Cal Poly moved from an NCAA Division II athletics program to NCAA Division I-AA status.

Born May 31, 1967, Rowell received his bachelor's degree in broadcast journalism in 1989, and a master's degree in business administration in 1994. He currently serves on the board of the Children's Hospital of Oakland.

CHRIS MULLIN

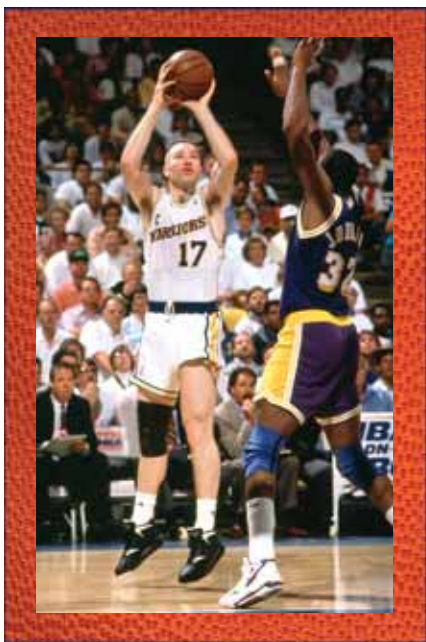

EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT, BASKETBALL OPERATIONS

One of the greatest players in franchise history, Chris Mullin was named executive vice president of basketball operations on April 22, 2004. Prior to assuming his current position, in which he oversees every aspect of the Warriors' basketball operations, Mullin spent two years in the team's front office as a special assistant.

In his first off-season at the helm of the club's basketball operations, Mullin made several moves that punctuated his philosophy of building a team – one that is centered on work ethic, dedication, teamwork and professionalism.

The first move Mullin made in this direction was the hiring of Mike Montgomery as head coach. A proven winner and highly regarded teacher of the game at the collegiate level, Montgomery was tabbed by Mullin in large part because of their shared beliefs in how the game of basketball should be played. To assist Montgomery's transition to the NBA, Mullin helped assemble a well-rounded coaching staff that includes a long-time NBA assistant and head coach (Terry Stotts), a respected former NBA player with coaching and championship experience (Mario Elie), a veteran NBA coach held-over from the previous season (Keith Smart) and a coach who had worked with Montgomery in the past and is familiar with his basketball philosophies and terminology (Russell Turner).

Mullin also spent this past off-season re-tooling the Warriors' roster in a concerted effort to surround the team's young core of talented players with solid, team-oriented veterans who could not only help on the court in the upcoming season, but also help in the younger players' development and provide leadership. Through free agency, the Warriors added Derek Fisher, a three-time NBA Champion with a history of clutch performances in pressure situations. Additionally, the Warriors re-signed free agents Adonal Foyle, a hard-working, defensive-minded center that has shown Warrior fans his willingness to do the little things needed to help win basketball games, and Calbert Cheaney, a true professional whose versatility allows him to contribute in several key areas. Via trade, Mullin acquired Dale Davis from Portland, adding a veteran frontcourt presence with an impressive NBA resume. He also engineered an eight-player sign-and-trade deal with Dallas that landed hardworking fan-favorite Eduardo Najera, rookie Luis Flores, two future first round draft picks and cash considerations. In the 2004 NBA Draft, Mullin selected Andris Biedrins with the 11th overall pick, landing a 6-11, 18-year-old Latvian with tremendous long-term potential. Additionally, each of these off-season moves were made with an eye towards the future and maintaining or improving the organization's financial flexibility.

Originally selected by the Warriors in the first round (#7 overall) of the 1985 NBA Draft, Mullin spent 13 of his 16 NBA seasons with Golden State, including the first 12 years of his career. The Brooklyn, NY, native was a five-time NBA All-Star, having been named to the Western Conference squad for five straight seasons from 1989-1993. In each of those five seasons, Mullin averaged 25-or-more points per game, joining Wilt Chamberlain as the only two players in franchise history to average at least 25 points for five consecutive seasons (only 13 players in NBA history have averaged 25-plus points for five consecutive seasons).

Mullin, 41, currently ranks among the top-10 in 17 of the club's all-time leader categories, including games played (1st, 807), scoring average (10th, 20.1), assists (4th, 3,146), steals (1st, 1,360), field goal percentage (19th, .513), free throw percentage (2nd, .864) and points (4th, 16,235). Among Warriors franchise playoff leaders, he ranks 6th in points (685), 5th in steals (43), 4th in blocks (32), 2nd in three-point field goals (23), 4th in field goal percentage (.520) and 5th in free throw percentage (.861) in 33 playoff contests with Golden State.

In 1991-92, Mullin became the first Warriors player to be named All-NBA First Team since Rick Barry in 1975-76. That season, he ranked third in the NBA in scoring (25.6 ppg) while leading the league in minutes played (3,346). In 1990-91, he was named All-NBA Second Team after ranking eighth in the league in scoring (25.7 ppg). No player in NBA history has posted a higher scoring average (25.7) coupled with higher field goal (.536) and free throw (.884) percentages than he recorded that season. He was also a starter on the 1991 Western Conference All-Star Team, becoming the first Warrior to start an All-Star game since Barry did so in 1978.

One of the purest shooters in the history of the NBA, Mullin earned All-NBA Third Team honors in 1989-90. That season, he became the first player to lead the Warriors in scoring (25.1 ppg – 7th in NBA) and rebounding (5.9 rpg) since Nate Thurmond in 1964-65. He ranked 5th in the NBA in scoring (26.5 ppg) in 1988-89, earning All-NBA Second Team honors, while becoming just the third player in team history to amass 2,000 points, 400 rebounds and 400 assists in a single season (Chamberlain and Barry).

Prior to re-joining the Warriors for his final NBA season in 2000-01, Mullin spent three seasons with Indiana (1997-98 thru 1999-00), helping guide the Pacers to the 2000 NBA Finals. In 1998-99, he became the 50th player in NBA history to reach the 17,500-point plateau. Mullin concluded his 16-year NBA career sporting averages of 18.2 points and 4.1 rebounds in 986 games.

Additionally, Chris was a member of the gold-medal winning USA Basketball Dream Team at the 1992 Olympic Games in Barcelona, averaging 12.9 points in eight games. He also won a gold medal as a college player at the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles. Mullin is one of just 12 players to ever win a pair of gold medals in Olympic basketball competition.

Prior to entering the NBA, Mullin was a two-time All-American and two-time Big East Conference Player of the Year at St. John's University. As a senior in 1985, he won the John R. Wooden Award as the nation's top college player and helped lead his team to the NCAA Final Four.

ROD HIGGINS

GENERAL MANAGER

Rod Higgins, who owns more than 21 years of NBA service as a player, coach and front office executive, was named general manager of the Golden State Warriors on May 20, 2004. He will report to Chris Mullin, the club's executive vice president of basketball operations, and will assist in all aspects of the team's basketball operations.

Higgins, 44, began his second stint as a member of the Warriors organization during the 2003-04 campaign, when he assisted the Warriors basketball operations department with scouting and various other projects.

Prior to re-joining the Warriors, Higgins spent the previous three seasons as the assistant general manager of the Washington Wizards. Hired for that position prior to the 2000-01 season by former teammate and close friend Michael Jordan (who at the time was the team's president of basketball operations), his responsibilities included collaborating on all basketball decisions, including transactions and trades, working with player personnel and scouting. Before moving to the front office with Washington, Higgins was an assistant coach with the Warriors for six seasons from 1994-95 to 1999-00.

In 13 seasons as an NBA player (1982-83 thru 1994-95), Higgins averaged 9.0 points, 3.6 rebounds and 1.6 assists in 779 games with Golden State, Chicago, Seattle, San Antonio, New Jersey, Sacramento and Cleveland. Originally drafted by the Bulls in the second round of the 1982 NBA Draft (#31 overall), he spent three seasons in Chicago before splitting the 1985-86 campaign between Seattle, San Antonio, New Jersey and Chicago.

Higgins signed with the Warriors as a free agent in November of 1986, and in parts of seven seasons with Golden State (six full seasons from 1986-87 thru 1991-92 and five games in 1994-95) he averaged 10.8 points, 4.3 rebounds and 1.7 assists over 416 regular-season contests. He also appeared in 29 playoff games with the Warriors, averaging 8.7 points, 3.8 rebounds and 1.8 assists.

After playing with Sacramento in 1992-93 and with Cleveland in 1993-94, the Monroe, Louisiana, native rejoined the Warriors and played the first five games of the 1994-95 campaign before moving to the bench as an assistant coach on November 19, 1994.

Prior to joining the NBA, Higgins played four years at Fresno State University (1978-79 thru 1981-82), where he led the Bulldogs in scoring in each of his last three seasons and led the team to two PCAA Championships. A First Team All-Conference selection as both a junior and senior, he earned Honorable Mention All-America honors from both the Associated Press and The Sporting News as a senior.

Born on January 31, 1960, Higgins was raised in Chicago. He and his wife, Concetta, have two sons, Rick and Cory, and reside in Danville.

ALVIN ATTLES VICE PRESIDENT AND ASSISTANT GENERAL MANAGER

Al Attles has witnessed it all during his lengthy NBA legacy with the Warriors as a player, coach and executive – the exciting wins, the disappointing losses and the magical 1974-75 World Championship season. He has personal, first-hand accounts of Wilt Chamberlain's intimidating presence, Nate Thurmond's defensive prowess, Rick Barry's offensive explosions, the exciting days of "Run-TMC" and the high-flying antics of two-time NBA Slam Dunk Champion Jason Richardson. Attles is one of only five players in Warriors history to have his jersey retired (#16) - joining Barry (#24), Chamberlain (#13), Thurmond (#42) and Tom Meschery (#14) – and remains one of the most publicly recognizable sports figures in the Bay Area.

Beginning his 45th year with the Warriors organization in 2004-05, Attles' current stint with the same team represents the second-longest active streak in the NBA, trailing only Boston's Red Auerbach, who has been a member of the Celtics' organization since 1950. The 68-year-old Attles joined the Warriors in 1960 (Philadelphia Warriors' fifth-round draft choice) and has since been affiliated with the club in one capacity or another, building a unique relationship based on commitment, loyalty and dedication. He has spent the last 16 years – since 1987 – as assistant general manager with the Warriors, assisting the front office in a variety of ways, ranging from player personnel input to numerous speaking engagements (he spent a brief stint in 1997 as interim general manager prior to the hiring of Garry St. Jean). "The Legend," as he is known among members of the Warriors' organization, continues to visit numerous schools each year and is extremely active in the Northern California community. His endless contributions locally as a player, executive and civic leader resulted in his much-deserved induction into the Bay Area Sports Hall of Fame in 1993.

In the latter stages of the 1969-70 NBA campaign, Attles was named head coach of the Warriors, replacing George Lee after 52 games (spent the final two years of his playing career [1969-70 and 1970-71] as a player/coach). His 30-game stint as head coach to end that season proved to be the start of the longest head coaching run in Warriors franchise history, a 13-plus year tenure which produced, among other highlights, the lone NBA Championship in the club's West Coast history (1974-75). Under Attles' tutelage, Golden State captured the Pacific Division title during the 1974-75 championship season and defeated Seattle (4-2) and Chicago (4-3) en route to the NBA Finals, where the Warriors swept the Washington Bullets (4-0).

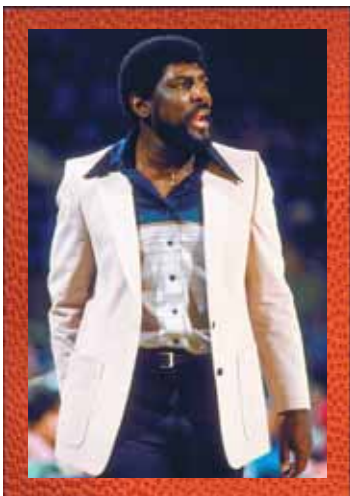

During his 13-year coaching run, Attles guided the Warriors to six playoff berths, two division titles and amassed an overall 557-518 record, which ranks 18th on the NBA's all-time coaches winning list. One season after leading Golden State to the NBA title, he led the Warriors to a sparkling 59-23 record in 1975-76, the best mark in franchise history and the top record in the NBA that season. Additionally, Golden State posted an all-time franchise record 11 consecutive wins during the 1971-72 campaign, Attles' second full season at the helm. He also was named head coach of the Western Conference All-Star Team in both 1975 and 1976 and guided the Warriors to eight consecutive winning seasons during his first eight full seasons as head coach. Attles completed his coaching career in 1982-83 to become the Warriors GM, heading the team's basketball operations for three years (1983-84 through 1985-86).

Attles originally joined the Warriors as a player when the franchise was located in Philadelphia, where he spent his rookie season with the team (1960-61) and one additional campaign before the team moved to San Francisco in 1962. One of the most aggressive and hard-nosed players in the league, Attles earned the unique nickname of "The Destroyer," which appropriately described his mentality on the floor. During his 11-year NBA career, he averaged 8.9 points, 3.5 rebounds and 3.5 assists in 711 regular-season games and currently ranks fifth on the Warriors all-time games played list (711). Furthermore, he was involved in one of the most memorable games in NBA history on May 2, 1962, when he and teammate Wilt Chamberlain combined for 117 points against the New York Knicks, the most ever by a pair of players in league annals. In that game, Attles tallied 17 points (8-8 FG, 1-1 FT), while Chamberlain netted an all-time NBA record 100 points. He retired following the 1970-71 campaign to focus strictly on coaching, eliminating his dual role as player/coach.

A 1960 graduate of North Carolina A&T, Attles earned his Bachelor's Degree in Physical Education and History. He later added a Master's Degree in Curriculum and Instruction to his credentials from the University of San Francisco in 1983 and was recently named to the Board of Regents at Mills College. He was also named to the Urban Sports Network Advisory Board for Interactive Sports, joining motivational speaker Les Brown and former New York Yankees General Manager Bob Watson.

A native of Newark, New Jersey, Attles was inducted into the New Jersey Sports Hall of Fame in 1996 and the New Jersey Sportswriters Hall of Fame in 1991.

Al and his wife, Wilhelmina, reside in Oakland and have two adult children, Alvin III and Erica.

MITCH RICHMOND
SPECIAL ASSISTANT

Mitch Richmond, a 14-year NBA veteran and six-time All-Star, begins his second stint as a member of the Golden State Warriors organization in 2004-05 as a special assistant. In his new role, Richmond will provide assistance to the entire basketball operations staff, including Executive Vice President of Basketball Operations Chris Mullin, General Manager Rod Higgins and Head Coach Mike Montgomery. Additionally, his expertise will be utilized in player development and scouting.

Originally selected by the Warriors in the first round (#5 overall) of the 1988 NBA Draft, Richmond was named NBA Rookie of the Year in 1988-89 and was the league's only unanimous All-Rookie First Team selection after averaging 22.0 points per game. That season, Richmond and Mullin teamed to form the top-scoring tandem in the NBA, averaging a combined 48.6 points per game.

After averaging 22.1 points during his sophomore campaign, Richmond joined forces with Mullin and second-year point guard Tim Hardaway in 1990-91 to form the highest scoring trio in the NBA at 72.5 points per game. In fact, all three members of "Run-TMC" finished among the league leaders in scoring, with Mullin ranking 8th (25.7 ppg), Richmond 10th (23.9 ppg) and Hardaway 11th (22.9 ppg).

After being traded to Sacramento prior to the 1991-92 campaign, Richmond made six consecutive trips to the NBA All-Star Game, earning MVP honors of the league's annual showcase in 1995 in Phoenix by scoring 23 points in just 22 minutes. He finished fourth in the NBA in scoring at 22.3 points per game in 1997-98, joining Oscar Robertson, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Michael Jordan as the only four players in league history to top 21.0 points per game in each of their first 10 seasons. Richmond, who led Sacramento in scoring in all seven of his seasons with the team, had his #2 Kings jersey retired by the organization on December 5, 2003.

A member of the gold-medal winning "Dream Team III" at the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta and the bronze-medal squad at the 1988 Olympic Games in Seoul, Richmond was traded to Washington in 1998-99. After a three-year stint with the Wizards, he signed with the Los Angeles Lakers prior to the 2001-02 campaign and punctuated his career by winning the 2002 NBA Championship.

Richmond concluded his 14-year NBA career sporting career averages of 21.0 points, 3.9 rebounds and 3.5 assists in 976 games. With 20,497 points, he currently ranks 27th on the NBA's all-time scoring list and is one of only 28 players to ever surpass the 20,000-point plateau. Additionally, he ranks 7th on the NBA's all-time three-point field goal list with 1,326 three-pointers made.

Prior to joining the NBA, Richmond played his final two collegiate seasons at Kansas State, where he was a consensus Second Team All-America and First Team All-Big Eight selection as a senior. He finished his two year-run as the most prolific two-year scorer in school history with 1,327 points, leading the team to a pair of NCAA Tournament appearances. Richmond began his college career at Moberly Area Junior College in Moberly, Missouri, where he was named First Team JUCO All-America as a sophomore.

Mitch and his wife, Juli, have three sons, Phillip, Jerin and Shane. Richmond also has a daughter, Tearra.

MIKE MONTGOMERY
HEAD COACH

Mike Montgomery was named head coach of the Golden State Warriors on May 21, 2004. Prior to joining the Warriors, Montgomery spent 18 years (1986-2004) as the head coach at Stanford University, building one of the nation's top collegiate basketball programs. As the winningest men's basketball coach in school history, he led the Cardinal to 16 post-season tournament appearances (12 NCAA, four NIT), a trip to the 1998 NCAA Final Four in San Antonio, the NIT Championship in 1991, four regular-season Pac-10 titles, the 2004 Pac-10 Tournament crown and a record of 393-167 (.702).

Over his final decade at Stanford (1994-95 thru 2003-04), Montgomery guided 10 Cardinal teams to a combined 269-70 (.794) record, winning 20-or-more games in each of those 10 seasons. He led Stanford to its first-ever No. 1 national ranking on December 20, 1999, and the Cardinal was subsequently ranked No. 1 in the polls at some point during the 1999-00, 2000-01 and 2003-04 campaigns. Additionally, his teams finished either 1st or 2nd in the Pac-10 in each of his final eight seasons on "The Farm." In his final season on the Palo Alto campus, he guided the Cardinal to an impressive 30-2 record -- highlighted by a 26-game winning streak to begin the season.

Montgomery, 57, owns an impressive 547-244 (.692) collegiate coaching record overall, including eight seasons at the University of Montana (1978-1986). In 26 years as a head coach on the collegiate level, he posted 25 winning seasons.

Eight players who schooled under Montgomery during his time at Stanford went on to become first-round NBA draft picks (Adam Keefe, Todd Lichti, Brevin Knight, Mark Madsen, Jason Collins, Curtis Borchardt, Casey Jacobsen and Josh Childress). Additionally, four athletes under Montgomery's tutelage were named Wooden All-Americans (Lichti '89, Madsen '00, Jacobsen '01 and Childress '04).

Montgomery's list of coaching honors while at Stanford includes being named Naismith College Basketball Coach of the Year in 1999-00, Pac-10 Coach of the Year four times (1998-99, 1999-00, 2002-03, 2003-04), Basketball Times Coach of the Year twice (1999-00, 2003-04), United States Basketball Writers Association (USBWA) District-9 Coach of the Year three times (2000-01, 2002-03, 2003-04), National Association of Basketball Coaches (NABC) District-14 Coach of the Year three times (1999-00, 2000-01, 2003-04) and Sports Illustrated Coach of the Year in 2003-04.

To cap his list of achievements on the collegiate level, Montgomery was honored with the 2004 John R. Wooden "Legends of Coaching" Lifetime Achievement Award. He became the sixth collegiate coach to earn the distinguished honor, joining an impressive list that includes Dean Smith, Mike Krzyzewski, Lute Olson, Denny Crum and Roy Williams.

Among his many accomplishments at Stanford, Montgomery produced results that the school had not seen for decades. During the 1998-99 season, he directed the Cardinal to the school's first conference title since the 1962-63 season -- becoming Stanford's all-time winningest men's basketball coach. In just his second year at Stanford's helm in 1987-88, Montgomery piloted the Cardinal to a 21-12 record and an invitation to the 1988 NIT -- becoming the first Stanford team in 46 years to reach postseason play. The following year (1988-89), the Cardinal posted a 26-7 record to advance to the 1989 NCAA Tournament, marking the school's first NCAA Tournament appearance since Stanford won the 1942 NCAA championship.

Prior to being named head men's basketball coach at Stanford University on April 25, 1986, Montgomery spent the previous 10 years at the University of Montana. After serving two seasons as an assistant for the Grizzlies, Montgomery served as Montana's head coach for eight seasons, compiling a record of 154-77 (.667). Montgomery's teams averaged 19 wins per season while at Montana, posted eight consecutive winning seasons and advanced to the NIT post-season tournament in each of his last two years at the school.

During Montgomery's time at Montana, the university had four players drafted by the NBA: John Stroeder in the eighth round by the Portland Trail Blazers in 1980; Derrick Pope in the sixth round by Portland in 1983; Marc Glass in the fourth-round by the Los Angeles Clippers in 1984; and Larry Krystkowiak in the second round by the San Antonio Spurs in 1986.

Montgomery served as an assistant coach for three years at Boise State before moving to Montana. He was also on coaching staffs at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy (head coach, freshman team), Colorado State, the Citadel, and the University of Florida.

Montgomery added another title to his resume when he was named on April 29, 1996, as head coach of the 1996 USA Men's 22-and-Under Select team by the USA Basketball Men's Collegiate Committee. Under Montgomery's direction, the U.S. 22-and-Under team captured the gold medal at the 1996 COPABA Men's 22-and-Under World Championship Qualifying Tournament in Caguas, Puerto Rico. For his efforts, Montgomery was named 1996 USA Basketball Developmental Coach of the Year and the USOC Basketball Developmental Coach of the Year.

In 2002, Montgomery was an assistant coach for the United States at the World Basketball Championships in Indianapolis. Montgomery also previously served USA Basketball as an assistant coach for the 1994 Men's Junior World Championship Qualifying Team that journeyed to Argentina and won the gold medal with an 8-0 record. Additionally, he coached a Pacific-10 Conference all-star team that toured Holland and Belgium in 1991.

A native of Long Beach, Montgomery is a 1968 graduate of Cal State Long Beach, where he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in physical education. In 2002, he was named to the Long Beach State Hall of Fame. He continued his education at Colorado State University, receiving a Masters Degree in physical education in 1976.

Born on February 27, 1947, Montgomery and his wife, Sarah, have two children (John, 20 and Anne, 18). The family resides in Menlo Park.

ASSISTANT COACHES

TERRY STOTTS

ASSISTANT COACH

Terry Stotts, an 11-year NBA coaching veteran, begins his first season as an assistant coach for the Warriors in 2004-05. Prior to joining the Warriors, he had spent the last two seasons with the Atlanta Hawks, including the last year and a half as head coach.

As a head coach in Atlanta, Stotts posted an overall record of 52-85, including a 24-31 mark in the final 55 games of the 2002-03 campaign after he replaced Lon Kruger on December 26, 2002. Before joining the Hawks in August of 2002, Stotts enjoyed a highly successful stint as an assistant coach under George Karl for nine seasons – five with the Seattle SuperSonics and four with the Milwaukee Bucks. During this stretch, the SuperSonics and Bucks concluded each season with a winning record (.500-or-better) and qualified for the playoffs in eight of nine seasons.

In four seasons as the lead assistant in Milwaukee, Stotts helped the Bucks amass a 163-133 mark, punctuated by three appearances in the playoffs, a Central Division Championship (2000-01) and a berth in the Eastern Conference Finals (2000-01). Throughout his tenure in Seattle (including one season as an advance scout in 1992-93), the Sonics posted a 357-135 record, captured four Pacific Division titles, reached the Western Conference Finals twice and appeared in the 1996 NBA Finals. Additionally, he served as an assistant coach – along with the remaining Seattle staff – for the Western Conference All-Star team on three occasions (1994, 1996, 1998).

Stotts, 46, was a second round choice of the Houston Rockets in the 1980 NBA Draft and began his professional playing career in Italy before joining the Montana Golden Nuggets of the CBA. He returned to Europe for several seasons, playing in Spain and France, before returning to the United States to join Karl's coaching staff with the Albany Patroons in 1990-91. During his first year on a professional coaching staff, he helped lead the Patroons to an all-time CBA-best 50-6 record. Fellow Warriors assistant coach Mario Elie was a player on that record-setting team before being called up by Golden State. Stotts remained in the CBA for one more season with the Fort Wayne Fury before moving on to the Sonics.

A four-year starter at the University of Oklahoma from 1976-77 thru 1979-80, Stotts earned All-Big Eight honors as a senior and was named Academic All-American in each of his final two collegiate seasons. Additionally, he was named the university's outstanding senior student-athlete and was one of three individuals chosen nationally to receive an NCAA Post-Graduate Scholarship. Stotts earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Zoology and, in 1988, earned his Masters of Business Administration from his alma mater.

Stotts, whose parents were both teachers and whose father was a basketball coach, was born in Cedar Falls, Iowa, and was raised in Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana and Guam. He and his wife, Jan, reside in the Bay Area.

MARIO ELIE

ASSISTANT COACH

Mario Elie, who played 11 seasons in the NBA – including two with Golden State – begins his first year as a Warriors assistant coach in 2004-05. Prior to joining the Warriors coaching staff, he spent last season on the bench as an assistant coach with the San Antonio Spurs. Elie has made the playoffs in all 12 of his seasons as an NBA player and coach.

Elie, 40, enjoyed a successful NBA playing career, averaging 8.6 points, 2.8 rebounds and 2.6 assists in 732 regular season games with Golden State, Philadelphia, Portland, Houston, San Antonio and Phoenix. He also played in 116 career playoff contests, winning three NBA Championships with Houston (1994 & 1995) and San Antonio (1999).

A native of New York City, Elie enjoyed some of his finest playing moments as a member of the Houston Rockets. He started all four games of the 1995 NBA Finals against Orlando, averaging 16.3 points, 4.3 rebounds and 3.3 assists en route to winning his second consecutive title. Additionally, his best individual season came in 1996-97, when he averaged 11.7 points, 4.0 assists and 3.0 rebounds in 78 games for the Rockets. In 1998, he was named to the Rockets 30-Year Team as one of the top 10 players in club history.

After going undrafted by the NBA in 1985 out of American International College – a Division II school in Springfield, Massachusetts – Elie played in Portugal, Argentina, Ireland, the USBL, the WBL and the CBA before making his NBA debut with the Philadelphia 76ers in December of 1990. After appearing in three games for the 76ers, Elie signed a 10-day contract with Golden State on February 23, 1991. Five days later, he signed a contract to keep him with the Warriors through the end of the following season. During his two seasons in the Bay Area (1990-91 & 1991-92), Elie appeared in 109 regular-season games, averaging 7.8 points, 3.1 rebounds and 2.0 assists in 21.1 minutes per contest. In 13 playoff contests, he averaged 10.3 points, 4.2 rebounds and 1.8 assists, while playing alongside current team executives Chris Mullin, Rod Higgins and Mitch Richmond.

As a sophomore at Power Memorial High School in New York City, Elie teamed with Mullin on a junior varsity team that went 25-0. While Mullin transferred to Xavierian High for his junior and senior years, Elie stayed at Power Memorial, the same high school attended by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Mario (pronounced MERRY-oh) and his wife, Gina, are the parents of triplets, Gaston, Glenn and Lauren. Gina is a television personality who has most recently worked as a national correspondent for MSNBC and as a nightly news anchor for KTRK-TV in Houston. Elie, who earned a degree in human relations from American International, speaks Spanish, Portuguese and French.

KEITH SMART

ASSISTANT COACH

Keith Smart enters his second season as an assistant coach for the Golden State Warriors in 2004-05, his fifth season as an NBA assistant coach. Overall, Smart owns 16 years of professional basketball experience as either a player or coach.

Among his many duties during his first season at Golden State, Smart worked closely with players on individual skill development and game strategy. He worked especially close with the team's youngest players -- Mickael Pietrus and Mike Dunleavy -- both of whom showed progress throughout the campaign and played some of their best basketball in the late stages of the season.

Smart, 40, joined the Warriors after spending the previous three seasons with the Cleveland Cavaliers. He was named the Cavaliers interim head coach in the middle of the 2002-03 season (January 20, 2003), and posted a 9-31 record in 40 games after taking over for John Lucas. At the time, he was the second youngest head coach in the NBA, trailing only Eric Musselman. During his first two-plus seasons in Cleveland, Smart held the position of assistant coach/director of player development.

Prior to joining the Cavs, Smart spent three seasons as the head coach of the CBA's Fort Wayne Fury, compiling a record of 85-83 (.506) and guiding the team to its first back-to-back winning seasons in franchise history in 1997-98 and 1998-99. In his first campaign as a head coach at any level in 1997-98, he guided the Fury to a franchise-record 31-win season and a trip to the playoffs. The club made the playoffs again in 1998-99, despite having a single-season franchise record nine players signed to NBA contracts. He was awarded the American Conference Coach of the Month Award five times during his tenure with Fort Wayne and had a CBA-high 21 players signed to NBA contracts.

During his professional basketball playing career, Smart spent nine seasons in the CBA, where he averaged 10.3 points in 297 contests. Smart also played briefly in the NBA, appearing in two games for the San Antonio Spurs during the 1988-89 season.

Smart was originally drafted by the Warriors in the second round (41st overall) of the 1988 NBA Draft. As a collegiate player, he spent two seasons at Indiana University after earning Junior College All-American honors at Garden City (Kansas) Community College. He is widely remembered for his Final Four heroics in 1987, in which he was named the Most Outstanding Player of the Final Four after leading Indiana to a National Championship with his game-winning shot versus Syracuse in the title game. Smart earned a B.S. in Communications from Indiana in 1998.

Born on September 21, 1964, Keith and his wife, Carol, have two sons, André and Jared. They currently reside in Dublin.

WARRIORS STAFF

RUSSELL TURNER

ASSISTANT COACH

Russell Turner, 34, begins his first year as a Warriors assistant coach and his first season in the NBA in 2004-05. Prior to joining the Warriors coaching staff, he spent the last four seasons at Stanford University, working alongside current Warriors' Head Coach Mike Montgomery.

During Turner's time at Stanford, the Cardinal amassed a 74-21 record (.779) and advanced to four-straight NCAA Tournaments. His duties included on-floor coaching, recruiting, scouting, game preparation and scheduling. He also played a prominent role in the Stanford Boys Basketball Camp each summer while on "The Farm."

Prior to joining the coaching staff at Stanford, Turner served as an assistant coach at Wake Forest University from 1994 to 2000. During his time at Wake Forest, the Deacons won a pair of ACC Championships and an NIT title, while reaching post-season play in all six seasons. Turner helped coach several future NBA players, including Tim Duncan, Josh Howard and Darius Songaila.

Before joining Wake Forest, the Roanoke, Virginia, native worked for one season (1993-94) as an assistant coach at his alma mater, Hampden-Sydney (VA) College. That season, the team finished 22-8 and reached the Division III NCAA Tournament Sweet Sixteen for just the second time in school history.

As a player at Hampden-Sydney, Turner was a two-time All-American (1991-92), set the school's all-time scoring record (2,272 points) and was runner-up for the NCAA Division III Player of the Year award in 1992. His teams set school records for wins, while earning two league championships and made the school's first two appearances in the NCAA Tournament.

Turner graduated in 1992 with Magna Cum Laude honors and a B.A. in English and Economics. He also gained numerous academic honors, including introduction into Phi Beta Kappa.

Born October 24, 1970, Turner and his wife, Elizabeth, live in Menlo Park with their newborn daughter, Devlin.

TOM ABDENOUR
ATHLETIC TRAINER

As an athletic trainer, Tom Abdenour has earned respect and admiration from not only his colleagues in the NBA, but throughout the professional and amateur training ranks as well. Entering his 18th season with the Warriors as the club's athletic trainer, Abdenour is one of only five trainers in the NBA who have been with their current team for that amount of time. In his role, he is responsible for the day-to-day health of the team, the evaluation and rehabilitation therapy of injuries.

In 1990, just his third season in the league, Tom's peers elected him as the NBA's Athletic Trainer of the Year. Ten years later, during the summer of 2000, Abdenour served as athletic trainer for the gold medal-winning USA Men's Basketball Team at the Summer Olympics in Sydney, Australia. His list of accomplishments also includes serving as athletic trainer for the Western Conference at NBA All-Star 2000 (hosted by the Warriors) and as a volunteer athletic trainer at the 1999 Pan-Am Games, the Goodwill Games in New York City and the 1994 U.S. World Championships in Toronto. Additionally, Abdenour has also served as an athletic trainer at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, where in the summer of 2003 he worked with the Men's and Women's National Wrestling teams.

An active member of the National Athletic Trainers Association, he played a major role in the expansion of the NATAs exhibit at the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame. His credits include the authorship of an injury guide book in 1992 and the co-creation of Pro-Stim, a device which combines electrical stimulation and cold therapies.

Abdenour is currently an active committee member for the St. Vincent de Paul Society and a driving force behind the CHAMPION Guidance Center for Men, a center for homeless men in Oakland. Founded in the summer of 2003, CHAMPION is a sports-themed, drop-in center -- essentially a sports bar without the alcohol -- where local homeless men can get a free meal, receive job training, do their laundry, shower, receive a hair-cut and watch NBA games on television.

Prior to joining the Warriors in 1987, Abdenour spent eight years as the athletic trainer for all 15 varsity sports programs at Weber State in Ogden, Utah. His career began in 1978 at Hillsdale College in South Central, Michigan, where he spent one year as its athletic trainer before moving on to Weber State.

A graduate of Wayne State University in Detroit, Abdenour received his bachelor's degree in biology and his master's degree in science education in 1978. His brother, Mike, is the athletic trainer for the Detroit Pistons, making the Abdenour's the first brother training combination in professional sports. Tom and his wife, Christine, live in San Leandro and have three children - Rebecca (21), Carolyn (20) and Thomas (15).

MARK GRABOW
DIRECTOR OF ATHLETIC DEVELOPMENT

Entering his 17th season with the Warriors, Mark Grabow continues his role as Golden State's director of athletic development. Grabow is responsible for overseeing the team's strength training, conditioning, speed and power development and flexibility programs. In addition, he oversees injury rehabilitation throughout the year and designs personalized curriculums for each player.

Highly respected in the sports and fitness industry, Grabow is involved in several different areas within the field. He is the author of a book titled "The On Court 100," which serves as a training manual for coaches on every level. He was a featured speaker at the 1997 Women's Final Four and also at the 1995 European Basketball Championships in Athens, Greece. In addition, Grabow has trained a variety of athletes, including both the Lithuanian and Japanese national basketball teams. He has worked with the 1990 Stanford women's NCAA championship basketball team, as well as the Stanford men's basketball team and men's NCAA championship tennis team. Grabow's expertise has also been called upon by tennis pros such as Andy Roddick, Brad Gilbert, Jared Palmer, Aaron Krickstein, Jennifer Capriati, Mary Pierce and the U.S. National Junior tennis team.

Additionally, Grabow served as a conditioning coach at Pete Newell's Big Man Camp for 16 years. He is a certified strength and conditioning specialist by the National Strength and Conditioning Association and a certified Level 1 coach by the U.S. Weightlifting Federation, as well as a sports speed/movement specialist. Grabow is also the owner and founder of his own company, "Pro Fit" which designs training programs for elite athletes.

A native of Paterson, New Jersey, Grabow graduated with a bachelor's degree in psychology and education from American University in Washington, D.C. and was inducted into the school's Athletic Hall of Fame in 1998. He earned eight varsity letters and was captain of his soccer and baseball teams. In soccer, Grabow was an All-South selection and was named the Middle Atlantic Conference's MVP in 1973. He played professionally for the Washington Diplomats of the North American Soccer League from 1975-77, and also represented the United States in the Pan-American Games. In addition, he was a competitive tri-athlete and has competed in the Hawaiian Iron Man competition.

Mark and his wife, Lori, have one son, Jesse (7).

JOHN MURRAY
STRENGTH & CONDITIONING COACH

John Murray enters his first season as the Warriors strength and conditioning coach. In his new role, he will be responsible for implementing the team's strength and conditioning programs. His training approach is based on functionally addressing the individual needs of the players, while incorporating basketball specific exercises.

Prior to joining the Warriors, Murray served as the director of strength and conditioning for Stanford University men's basketball since April, 2001. A graduate from the University of California at Berkeley with a B.A. in Psychology, Murray received his M.A. in Clinical Sports Psychology from John F. Kennedy University.

Murray has worked as a personal trainer for numerous professional athletes, including NBA players Tayshaun Prince, Freddie Jones, Troy Bell, Casey Jacobsen, Joel Pryzbilla and Curtis Borchardt. Along with his personal training experience and expertise, Murray has also worked with the Canadian Football League's Sacramento Goldminers, the Japanese Basketball League's Japan Energy Griffins and Bosch Blue Winds, and Major League Soccer's San Jose Earthquakes.

Born and raised in San Francisco, Murray began his athletic performance-training career in 1986 when he directed a sports fitness program in San Francisco's Tenderloin district for under privileged, at-risk youths. In addition to this experience, Murray has consulted for a number of high school athletic programs in San Francisco. Prior to joining the Stanford Basketball staff, Murray spent two years as a physical therapy assistant for Physiotherapy Associates in Fremont.

A certified strength and conditioning specialist and a United States Weightlifting Federation certified club coach, Murray has studied and practiced martial arts for the past 20 years. While at Stanford, he also served as the director of Program Development and Synergy Performance Training for the Riekes Center in Menlo Park, where he oversaw the training of elite and professional athletes. Since 1994, Murray has been a member of the coaching staff at the Riekes Center, a non-profit school providing education in athletics & fitness, the arts and wilderness awareness.

Murray and his wife, Fay, currently reside in San Francisco.

PETE D'ALESSANDRO
DIRECTOR OF BASKETBALL OPERATIONS

Pete D'Alessandro is entering his first season as director of basketball operations for the Golden State Warriors.

In his current role, D'Alessandro assists the team's Executive Vice President of Basketball Operations Chris Mullin and General Manager Rod Higgins in developing overall strategy and managing day-to-day basketball operations. Some of his areas of focus include player contracts, salary cap analysis, and Collective Bargaining Agreement rules and regulations.

An attorney, he spent the past seven years managing the business and contractual affairs of individual NBA players, before being appointed to his new position by fellow St. John's University alumnus, Chris Mullin.

D'Alessandro relocated from Washington, DC to join the Warriors. He and his wife, Leah, currently live in San Francisco with their Jack Russell Terrier, Bugsy.

TRAVIS STANLEYEXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT, TEAM MARKETING

Travis Stanley begins his third season as the Warriors executive vice president, team marketing and his seventh season overall with the organization. In his current role with the club, Stanley serves in the primary role of assisting the team's president with the overall day-to-day aspects of the team's business operations, while directly overseeing the club's marketing, ticket sales, public relations, events and promotions and creative services efforts.

Stanley was appointed to his present position in August of 2002, after spending four seasons as the Warriors' vice president of public relations. During his 14-year NBA PR career, Stanley twice acted as a host PR member in the league's annual All-Star extravaganza -- NBA All-Star 2000 in Oakland and the 1992 NBA All-Star Game in Orlando.

He began his NBA career as the assistant director of publicity/media relations for the Orlando Magic (1988-92) before arriving in Northern California, where he spent six seasons as the director of media relations for the Sacramento Kings (1992-98).

The Lansing, Michigan native earned a journalism degree from Florida Southern College (Lakeland, FL) where he served as team captain of the NCAA Division II basketball team as a senior. Stanley and his wife, Irene, currently reside in Oakland.

NEDA KIA*VICE PRESIDENT, BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT

In her second stint with the club, Neda Kia enters her fifth season with the Warriors and her first as the team's vice president of business development. Her responsibilities include creating new business, events, promotions and programs in an effort to enhance the team's brand, revenue and fan development. Kia also directs Golden State's community relations department, working closely with the players in an effort to create positive imaging and community outreach events. In addition, Kia also oversees the clubs ticket services department, which is responsible for various programs for season ticket holders.

Prior to re-joining the Warriors in January 2002, Kia spent two years at the NBA league office as the senior manager of community relations. In that position, she assisted with all Western Conference team programs, in addition to the NBA All-Star Game and NBA Finals. She also spent three seasons (1998-2000) with the WNBA's Phoenix Mercury as the director of communications and community relations. Kia's sports business career began in the Warriors public relations department, in 1995, where she was promoted to public relations manager in 1998 prior to leaving for Phoenix.

A Bay Area native, Kia earned her bachelor's degree in business at San Diego State before earning her masters in Sports Management from St. Mary's in Moraga, CA.

VICTOR PELTVICE PRESIDENT, CORPORATE SALES AND CLIENT SERVICES

Victor Pelt, a 14-year veteran of the sports marketing and sales industry, enters his fifth season with the Warriors and his first year as the team's vice president of corporate sales and client services for the Warriors. Prior to being named to his current position, Pelt served four years as the team's executive director of corporate sales and client services. In his current capacity, he oversees the corporate sales and client services department, which handles the sale and coordination of corporate partnerships as well as developing marketing and promotional programs for television, radio, print and internet media. Additionally, Pelt coordinates all signage and promotional properties for the club. During the 2000-01 season, his first with the organization, the Warriors achieved a 58 percent increase in corporate sponsorship.

Previously, Pelt served as corporate sales manager for the Portland Trail Blazers during the 1999-2000 season. Prior to his position with the Blazers, he spent four years (1995-1999) as the director of new business development and promotions for Kenton-Smith Advertising and Public Relations in Orlando, Florida and three years (1992-1995) as regional account executive for WQIM-AM sports radio in Orlando, FL.

The Rockledge, Florida native earned a liberal arts degree with emphasis on business administration from Central Florida University (Orlando, FL) in 1992. Pelt and his wife, Latonya, reside in San Ramon.

DWAYNE REDMON

VICE PRESIDENT, FINANCE

Dwayne Redmon begins his third season with the Warriors and his first as vice president of finance, overseeing all accounting operations, financial reporting and treasury functions for the organization. Redmon, who served his first two seasons with the Warriors as executive director of finance, also assists with payroll, insurance and other business administration for the organization. In addition, he serves as the chief financial officer for the Golden State Warriors Foundation.

Prior to joining the Warriors in October 2002, Redmon spent five years with the Atlanta Hawks in the same capacity as his current position. He also spent six years in public accounting for KPMG and Coppers & Lybrand. Redmon also owns two years of internal audit experience.

The 1987 San Jose State University graduate earned his bachelor's degree in business administration with a concentration in accounting.

Redmon, who was raised on the Presidio of San Francisco currently resides in Dublin with his wife Charlayne, and four children, Arianne, Candice, Julian and Phillip. In his spare time, Redmon enjoys coaching youth basketball and baseball teams.

SANDY TACAS

VICE PRESIDENT, BUSINESS TECHNOLOGY

Sandy Tacas is currently in her second year as the Warriors vice president of business systems and technology. In her current role, she continues to spearhead the organization's technological advances in computer and management systems, e-marketing and e-commerce, and telecommunications.

Overall, Tacas is in her seventh year as a member of the Warriors front office after joining the club as a computer systems consultant in 1996. Prior to being named to her current position, Tacas spent the previous two years as the team's executive director of technology.

Tacas has extensive experience in the technology and the computer industry for over 21 years. She has served as a consultant on numerous accounts, including USA Today, Dialysis Co., Aquarium of the Bay, TCI Cable Systems, ASCI Entertainment and as Systems Manager for Robert Mondavi Winery.

A resident of Benicia, Tacas enjoys camping, bike riding and spending time with her 11-year-old godson, Danny.

JOE AZZOLINA

SENIOR EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, ENTERTAINMENT

Joe Azzolina enters his first season as the Warriors' senior executive director of entertainment and his 11th season overall with the organization. Before being promoted to his present role, he previously served six years as executive director of events and promotions. In his current capacity, Azzolina oversees all aspects of Great Time Out Entertainment (GTOe), the sports marketing and entertainment arm of the Golden State Warriors. He also continues to assist in the development, implementation and execution of strategic marketing plans and research efforts for the club as well as developing and promoting the Warriors brand, while also strengthening relationships between the team and its fans.

Additionally, Azzolina oversees all aspects of game presentation and special events, as well as in-game arena operations. He is also responsible for all entertainment, including Warriors mascot Thunder, the Warrior Girls, Hoop Troop, the Weekend Warriors and the Junior Jam Squad. During the 2000-01 campaign, he was an integral part in the development of the "first of its kind" Entertainment Stage/Internet Café at The Arena in Oakland. Prior to joining the Warriors as a Game Operations Assistant in 1994, Azzolina interned with the Orlando Magic in the community relations and promotions departments.

The Reading, PA native earned his bachelor's degree in business administration from Mansfield University in Pennsylvania and his master's degree in sports management from Temple University. In his spare time, he enjoys teaching graduate classes at USF, ocean kayaking and running marathons. Azzolina and his wife, Erin, reside in San Jose.

DAN BECKER

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, BROADCASTING

Dan Becker's tenure with the Warriors has spanned 15 seasons. As executive director of broadcasting, Becker handles both the radio and television departments and has served as executive producer/director for the Warriors Television Network. Under his direction, the Warriors have received two Emmy Awards from the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences for best "Sports Live Broadcast." For the third consecutive season in 2004-05, he will work with FSN Bay Area as a producer/director on Warriors telecasts.

Before coming to the Bay Area in 1989, Becker worked as a freelance producer/director in Dallas. His credits included sports broadcasts for the Dallas Mavericks, Texas Rangers and a variety of other professional and college events. More recently, Becker worked for Turner Sports directing NBA Playoffs and for NBC as a director of the basketball world feed at the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, for which he received a National Emmy.

Becker graduated from the University of Texas, Austin in 1977 with a B.S. degree in radio/TV/film. He and his wife, Amy, live in the East Bay with their three children, Tory, Cole and Wynne.

ERIKA BROWN

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, HUMAN RESOURCES

Erika Brown enters her 13th season with the Warriors and her first as the executive director of human resources. Prior to being named to her current position, she served three seasons as the team's director of human resources. In her current role, Brown's responsibilities include all aspects of the Warriors human resources operation, in addition to payroll and office management.

After attending San Jose State University, where she majored in human resources management, Brown joined the Warriors in the administration department. After five seasons with the club, she was promoted to manager of human resources prior to the 1997-98 campaign. The San Francisco native has a bachelor's degree in business management from the University of Phoenix.

Brown currently lives in Antioch with her husband, Jeff, and their nine-year-old son, Jeffery Jr.

TOM KAUCIC

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, SUITE SERVICES

Tom Kaucic enters his eighth season with the Golden State Warriors. 2004-05 marks his second year as the team's executive director of suite services, after serving the previous four years as director of suite services. Kaucic originally joined the Warriors in October 1997 as the club's manager of suite services & suite sales, where he oversaw the completion of The Arena in Oakland's 72 luxury suites.

Kaucic's main responsibilities include the servicing of all 72 luxury suites, six private GrandView Suites and the Courtside Club – an exclusive dining room for Suite and Courtside Club ticket holders. He is also the team's primary liaison between all current and future suite owners with the Warriors.

Kaucic is currently in his fourth year as the president for the Association of Luxury Suite Directors, whose membership is comprised of more than 800 facilities and affiliates from the NBA, NFL, NHL, and MLB, as well as minor league sports and racing venues. As president of the organization, he plays a large role in the planning of the association's annual conference and tradeshow, which draws more than 1,200 attendees.

Prior to joining the Warriors, Kaucic owned a consulting company in Orange County, California. A native of Orange County, Kaucic enjoys golfing and sport fishing. He and his wife, Giuliana, and their daughter, Natalie, currently reside in San Ramon.

RAYMOND RIDDER

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, PUBLIC RELATIONS

Raymond Ridder enters his seventh season with the Warriors and his second as the team's executive director of public relations. A 14-year member of the NBA PR community, Ridder spent his first five seasons in Golden State as the director of public relations and was the Pacific Division's representative on the NBA's PR Advisory Committee for four years (1999-2003). In his current capacity, Ridder is the primary liaison between the Warriors and the local, national and international media. He is responsible for the coordination of all player/media interviews, game-night press accommodations, press conferences and written information disseminated by the team. Additionally, he assists with the team's overall marketing efforts through various print and electronic media outlets throughout the Bay Area.

A 1990 graduate of California State University, San Bernardino, where he earned his B.A. degree in marketing, Ridder joined the Los Angeles Lakers' public relations department as an intern prior to the 1990-91 season. He was promoted to assistant public relations director in June of 1993 and spent the following six seasons in that capacity with the Lakers. During his tenure in Los Angeles, the Lakers were at the center of the NBA's stage on numerous occasions, including Magic Johnson's retirement and comeback, the signing of center Shaquille O'Neal and the media hype generated by young phenom Kobe Bryant.

An avid runner and die-hard fan of the Cincinnati Reds and Dallas Cowboys, Ridder is a native of Riverside, CA and currently resides in Walnut Creek.

TERRY ROBINSON

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, ARENA OPERATIONS

Terry Robinson enters his eighth season overall with the Warriors, his fourth as the club's executive director of arena operations. Among his arena responsibilities, Robinson controls and coordinates all Warriors events at The Arena in Oakland with Spectator Management Group (SMG), the management company currently operating the facility. Additionally, he oversees the club's retail merchandise operations and serves as the NBA contact for arena security.

Among his many accomplishments, Robinson played a major role in assisting the NBA on a local level in preparation for NBA All-Star 2000, hosted by the Warriors. Additionally, he assisted USA Basketball in hosting the sold-out exhibition game between Team USA and the Chinese National Team at The Arena in Oakland in August 2002.

Robinson joined the Warriors as the club's director of food services in September 1997, overseeing the arena's food vendors and assisting in the timely opening of the new arena. He was promoted to director of arena operations in July of 1998 before assuming his current title in July 2001. He brings over 30 years of experience in the hospitality, stadium and arena industry and has worked with numerous pro franchises and assisted with several NFL Super Bowls and all-star games.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, TICKET SALES AND OPERATIONS

Darryl Washington enters his 16th season with the Warriors, his first as executive director of ticket sales and operations. Prior to being promoted to his current position, Washington served as the director of ticket operations for the previous four seasons. In his current capacity, Washington oversees and directs the organization's ticket sales staff as well as the ticket operations department. He is also responsible for developing the team's ticket plans including full season plans, half season plans, mini plans, group nights, and special individual ticket promotions.

Washington began his career with the Warriors as a game-night staff intern before being named assistant ticket office manager in July 1994. In 1999 he was promoted to director of ticket operations, during which time Washington and his staff were instrumental in advancing the organization's ticketing technology. Advancements include ticket bar-coding, internet sales, ticket e-mailing, and "print at home" features.

Affectionately known around the office as "the ticket guy," Washington is a native of San Francisco with family roots in Houston, Texas. An avid movie watcher, he lists thrillers and mysteries as his personal favorites. Additionally, Washington admits to being a video game junky and a roller coaster enthusiast. He also collects lapel pins, with a display that has grown to more than 1000 pins. Washington lives in Alameda with his wife, Judi, his teenage daughter, Jordan, and the newest member of the Washington family, Axel, a one-year-old Yorkie.
