The Professor's Discovery

By MALCOLM BROWN

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

Professor Singleton sat crouched over his microscope. To the observer he would have seemed to be studying only a tiny spot of jelly upon a slide. The professor, however, was looking into a thickly populated world. The drop of jelly, like the world, was round, and within it several millions of the spiranthea Jacksoni were putting on wings.

Singleton was forty-two. A rich man, he had devoted himself for years to his scientific investigations. Of late, however, ever since his marriage the year before to a charming society girl, who had devoted her whole care to his welfare, he had insensibly been drawn away from his hobby. That he had shamefully neglected Mary did not occur to him. He lived for his researches. Mary lived for him. She had abandoned all her old friends, except the Streets, George Street and she had been great friends before her marriage, and surprise had been felt that she had chosen the professor.

For two whole days and a night Singleton had bent over his microscope. He had not slept; he had eaten there, sipping beer tea and hot milk which his wife brought him. Now at last he was to be rewarded. Spiranthea was undoubtedly passing from the larval into the pupal stage, and from that into the full-fledged imago.

Suddenly Professor Singleton heard George Street's voice in the next room, and Mary's answering, "An old man," Street was saying, "Mary, you have tied yourself for life to one who can never appreciate or understand you. Your life is one long sacrifice."

"I know it," answered Mary, ever so softly.

The professor's heart was thumping against his ribs. "A shameless self-worshiper," Street's voice continued. "He lives for himself alone."

"No, there you do him an injustice," Mary responded. "He lives for science."

"And, like a Moloch, it immolates its victims upon its altars. You are the victim, Mary."

Professor Singleton sat bolt upright in his chair. For a moment he had forgotten his researches. He looked around him. His eye fell upon a Malay kriss hanging upon the wall, which a friend had sent him from Borneo.

The professor's eye returned mechanically to the microscope. The spiranthea was emerging from its pupa. Undoubtedly this proved his contention.

"How long will you suffer in this way, Mary? You are fifteen years younger than he. You have made a ghastly error—but why should it ruin your life?"

"It shall not," Professor Singleton heard his wife whisper.

The professor rose noiselessly out of his chair. He took down the kriss with trembling fingers.

The voices seemed louder now and shamelessly indifferent. Professor Singleton crept stealthily to the partly opened door.

"I love you," he heard reiterated through his maddened brain, and he was standing in the room now, and still the sounds continued. They seemed to elude him, traveling from corner to corner. The professor lunged forward, his outstretched hands encountered a soft object with flying draperies, and with a yell he thrust the kriss upward, turned it, and thrust again. Then he fell senseless upon the floor.

Morning—a quiver of sunlight—voices in the room. He opened his eyes, to find himself lying in bed in his own house, and his wife bending over him.

"What is it? Where did you come from?" he muttered, half unconscious. "You have been ill, dear," said Mary. "George Street. Where is he?" he asked.

"George? My dear, don't you remember that he sailed for the Philippines a month ago—three weeks before you were taken ill?"

"What did I do? I killed someone?" "You were found lying upon the floor of the living room. You had taken Mr. Humphreys' kriss and dug a hole in the armchair. You must have lain there for hours before I came home and found you. I thought you were in your laboratory."

That reminded him. "The microscope!" he exclaimed. "I must go. How long have I been ill?"

"About a week, dearest."

The professor sank back groaning. A week! Fifty generations of the spiranthea must have been born and died, and there would be years of patient work before he could renew the conditions which had existed before the illusion dragged him from his chair.

He remembered all now: George's departure, Mary's absence that evening at a neighbor's house. The voices had been born of his own conscience, and weakened and overstrained, he had heard them externally. Unless—unless they had been sent by some beneficent power to aid and warn him. "Mary," he said later that day, "when I get well I think I shall give up my researches. Let younger men take up the work. I have done with them."

"He saw the tears in her eyes. 'I'm a selfish old beast, my dear,' he added. 'But—I think I'm putting on wings now.'"

But only the professor understood.

Brain Size Unimportant. It was once believed that greater than average mental capacity meant a larger than average brain. This is proved not to be true, as the cubic content of an organ does not reveal the quality of the tissue.

Figure It Out and See. Mr. Slim—"There goes Mr. and Mrs. Dawson. She's twenty years old and he's forty." Mr. Stout—"You don't say? Twice as old as she. Just think, when she's fifty he'll be 100."

LAST HEARING IN DAMAGE CLAIM

Thirty Days to Hear Evidence in Action for Nearly One Million Dollar Adjustment.

The Schoharie Reservoir and Shandaken Tunnel commission, composed of Senator Kelly and Messrs. Mayham and Shea, this week concluded the trial of the claim of the Tri-County Light and Power Company against the city of New York for the condemnation of its power plant at Gilboa on the Schoharie river.

This claim, one of the most important involved in the construction of the reservoir and tunnel, is for $228,000. The trial occupied thirty days, and involved the examination of important electrical experts. Judge John P. Grant of Stamford is the president and principal owner of the property. The counsel for the company were Judge Clearwater and Harry H. Flemming of Kingston. The city was represented by Assistant Corporation Counsel William Crogan. The commission will hear the final argument on submission at their April session.

In addition the commission heard the claim of the Conesville and Gilboa Telephone company for the condemnation of that part of their plant embraced within the taking line of the reservoir and tunnel. This company has extensive ramifications throughout that portion of the Catskill mountains of which Gilboa village is the commercial center, Judge Grant and Judge Clearwater represented the company, and William Crogan, assistant corporation counsel, appeared for the city.

SEEKS ANNULMENT OF HIS MARRIAGE TO GALLI-CURCI

Luigi Curci, divorced husband of Madame Amelita Galli-Curci, has petitioned the papal tribunal at Rome to annul his marriage to the diva.

Madame Galli-Curci, who divorced her first husband two years ago, is now the wife of Homer Samuels of Minneapolis, her pianist.

The marital troubles of the famous singer culminated a few summers ago when she and her husband spent the season at Fleischmanns. A Fleischmanns woman named as correspondent.

Madame Galli-Curci is now building a handsome summer home on the mountain above Fleischmanns village.

Manganese.

Manganese is found in Japan in three forms: Metallic, which is over 50 per cent pure manganese, being used principally in the making of certain kinds of iron and steel and as an amalgam; dioxide, or "black manganese," having as high as 90 per cent manganese, and largely used in the making of chemicals, drugs, paints and electric batteries; and carbonate ore, which until recently has been a waste product in Japan.

But It's Less Popular.

Mother.

When Eve was brought unto Adam, he became filled with the Holy Spirit, and gave her the most sanctified, the most glorious of appellations. He called her Eve—that is to say, the Mother of All. He did not style her wife, but simply mother—mother of all living creatures. In this consists the glory and the most precious ornament of woman.—Martin Luther.
