RULING ON SUBMITTED MATTERS, TENTATIVE DECISION and PROPOSED STATEMENT OF DECISION

22 This matter having been argued and submitted, the Court now files its Tentative 23 Decision and Proposed Statement of Decision, pursuant to Rule 232, California Rules 24 of Court and DuPont Merck Pharmaceutical Co. v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal.App.4th 25 562, 564.

26 RULINGS ON SUBMITTED EVIDENTIARY MATTERS

27 At the time of the hearing of this matter the Court was asked to resolve several 28 objections to particular exhibits offered by the parties. While certain of those objections

1 were the subject of memoranda, the Court heard oral objections as well. Those 2 evidentiary matters not resolved on the record at the hearing were taken under 3 submission and are the subject of this section of this ruling.

4 Matters Related to the Anti-SLAPP Motion

5 1. Exhibit M to the Declaration of Laura Seigle, filed June 23, 2003 - objection 6 overruled.

7 2. Exhibit 4 to the Declaration on Jonathan Stern, filed July 3, 2003, and to 8 paragraph 5 of that declaration - objections sustained.

9 Matters Related to the Motion for Preliminary Injunction

10 1. Paragraphs 2 through 6 and the accompanying Exhibits 1 through 5 to 11 Declaration of John M. Gatti, filed June 23 - objections overruled.

12 2. Paragraphs 17 and 18 of that declaration - objections sustained.

13 3. Paragraph 21 of that declaration - objection sustained.

14 4. Paragraphs 2 through 8 of the Declaration of Rex Glensy, filed July 9, 2003 15 together with Exhibits 20 through 26 - objections sustained.

16 5. In footnote 9 at page 10 of the memorandum in support of plaintiff's motion 17 for preliminary injunction, plaintiff makes reference to additional declarations concerning 18 plaintiff's security concerns and indicates that she desires to file such documents in 19 camera. The request to file additional declarations is denied because the request for 20 submission of additional factual matters at that stage in the proceedings was untimely.
21 For this reason, the Court does not reach the question whether those declarations 22 would be properly received in camera, noting only that no substantive showing was 23 timely made to support any such request. See, e.g., Rule 243.2, California Rules of 24 Court.

25 Application of Evidence to Both Matters

26 The Court included in its written Tentative Ruling for the first hearing, and asked 27 counsel at that hearing, if the parties had any objection to having all admitted evidence 28 considered as to each of the two motions on calendar. Counsel for plaintiff objected.

1 (Transcript, July 14, page 10, line 24 through page 11, line 10) Nevertheless, in 2 briefing and arguing the Motion to Strike, counsel for defendants did not object to 3 references by counsel for plaintiff to evidence offered in connection with the Motion for 4 Preliminary Injunction and both sides argued the matters as if the evidence offered as to 5 one matter was to be considered as to both. Accordingly, the Court will analyze the 6 legal arguments in the context of the evidence admitted with respect to both motions.

7 STATEMENT OF FACTS

8 Plaintiff is a world-renowned singer, actress, movie director, composer and 9 producer, winner of Academy Awards and other public honors. As a consequence of 10 her celebrity, plaintiff has been adored by her fans, followed by the curious, and stalked 11 by the obsessed. She has been annoyed by photographers seeking uninvited "candid" 12 pictures, and she has been the recipient of threats to her personal safety. Plaintiff's 13 heightened concern for her safety has led her to take steps to shield her private affairs 14 from public view.

15 To enable her to reside out of public view and to prevent the public from 16 observing her while she is at home, plaintiff selected a residence located on a secluded 17 parcel of land within the City of Malibu. From the street and from other locations in 18 which persons may lawfully stand, it is not possible to see the interior of the parcel 19 except from the front gate. When standing at that location one may see only a largely 20 obstructed view of a portion of the front driveway and front exterior of the residence.
21 The location of the property on a bluff above the Pacific Ocean makes it impossible for 22 a person to see or approach the property by land from that direction. Other properties 23 adjoin plaintiff's parcel on either side, but vegetation planted along those common 24 property lines prevents viewing the interior of plaintiff's parcel from either adjoining 25 property.

26 Plaintiff also maintains an unlisted telephone number and has sought to deter 27 those who would search the real property records for her residence address by not 28 listing it in her stage name. [These efforts have been ineffective as described below.]

1 While taking these steps to dissuade unwanted visitors, plaintiff has also invited 2 guests to her home; granted reporters interviews in her home; permitted photographers 3 to take — and a national magazine to publish — pictures of her, of her and her 4 husband, and of the interior of her home and of its adjoining grounds; and opened her 5 home to invited guests.

6 Defendant Kenneth Adelman [Adelman] is the creator of the California Coastal 7 Records Project which posts on an Internet website maintained by defendant 8 Layer42.net [Layer42] digital image taken by Adelman. Adelman takes these images 9 from a helicopter flying seaward of the coastline of the Pacific Ocean at a distance of 10 about 2000 feet and at an altitude of between 150 and 2000 feet. Adelman has taken 11 digital images of “almost the entire California coastline” in this manner, totaling in 12 excess of 12,200 images. Each photograph, including the image of the plaintiff’s house 13 which is a central subject in this litigation, was taken with a digital camera with a 28-70
14 mm f/2.8 ED-IF AF-S Zoom-Nikon lens. The lens used to take these images produces 15 photographs of lesser resolution than those produced by what is described as a 16 “standard” 35 mm lens. The lens used does not extend past 70 mm and there is no 17 evidence that the lens can function as a telephoto lense.

18 The stated purpose of the California Coastal Records Project is the taking of 19 digital photographs of the entire coastline of California and making those photographs 20 available free of charge to state and local governmental entities, university researchers, 21 news organizations, conservation organizations, and others. It is also possible for 22 anyone to download these images free of charge or to purchase better quality prints of 23 the images contained on the website from defendant Pictopia.com [Pictopia] upon 24 payment of a fee and giving consent to the copyright license agreement which is 25 contained on the same website. The download function has been available since 26 February 14, 2003.

27 In late 2002 and in the course of the project, Adelman took a digital image of the 28

1 coast which included plaintiff's property. At the time he took this image he was unaware 2 that it included plaintiff's property. That image is posted on the California Coastal 3 Records Project website as Image 3850. It was taken at a distance of approximately 4 2700 feet from the plaintiff's residence using the camera described above. Nothing on 5 the California Coastal Records Project website lists the address of plaintiff's residence 6 or the longitude and latitude of specific buildings on her property. Because the 7 longitude and latitude of the location from which each of the images is taken are 8 recorded and also posted on the website, it is possible to calculate the coordinates for 9 plaintiff's parcel by application of the appropriate mathematical principles or by 10 accessing a third party's website which can make those calculations. Image 3850 11 carries a label or "tag", but only as it is displayed on the California Coastal Records 12 Project website: "Streisand Estate, Malibu". Once a person has gained access to the 13 California Coastal Records Project site, it is possible to search by that tag to reach a 14 screen which displays Image 3850. A general Internet search for the tag, using a 15 search engine such as Google or Yahoo, will not direct a searcher to the image posted 16 on defendants' site. Once access to the Image is obtained, it is possible to enlarge the 17 image, to download it to the user's computer and to print the enlarged image. The 18 image can be enlarged to specified sizes up to 36" x 24". [Plaintiff's memorandum 19 states [page 4, l. 26] that the size of the exhibit which it printed from the website [Exhibit 20 11] is 40" x 24". However, the actual size of the image is 36 x 24 on paper of the stated 21 dimension when borders are included.]

22 Image 3850 is taken from above the ocean, a vantage point clearly accessible 23 only to persons flying or gliding overhead. There is no location from which anyone on 24 the ground would have access to the view contained in this image, whether at the front 25 gate or at any other point on the perimeter of the property. Also, there is no evidence 26 that there is any such observation point on or from any coastal hill, for example.

27 Image 3850 depicts a landward view, showing the coastline [the ocean, the

1 breaking waves, the beach and the upland bluffs are all visible] and many residential 2 structures in the area, including the residence of plaintiff, as well as the neighborhood
3 streets and foliage; no street signs or cars are visible. Whether individuals can be seen 4 in the image is open to interpretation. Adelman concedes in his moving papers [Motion, 5 page 5, ll. 1-2] that the fact that there are individuals [described as tiny and indistinct 6 figures] on the beach can be discerned from image 3850. See Exhibit A. Inspection of 7 Exhibit 16, the largest print obtainable from the website, shows that such individuals can 8 be discerned at the right margin of the photograph; however, they are all too small to be 9 identifiable. With respect to plaintiff's real property, Image 3850 clearly shows the 10 presence and configuration of improvements such as the rear elevation of the house, as 11 well as the rear deck, swimming pool and deck chairs, tables and umbrellas — all things 12 not observable from any location on the ground outside the boundaries of plaintiff's 13 property. The interior of plaintiff's residence is not visible in the image, nor can it be 14 discerned to any extent by enlargement of the image.

15 The fact that Image 3850 is "posted" on the Internet means that it is available to 16 anyone with Internet access. As mentioned, it is also possible to order a high quality 17 photograph of the image, in varying sizes by payment of from $50 to $120.00.
18 Examples of such photographs are Exhibits A, 11 and 16.¹

19 From February 14, 2003 through May 30, 2003, there were 14,418 downloads 20 without charge from the website. Image 3850 was downloaded six times, twice to the 21 Internet address of counsel for plaintiff. Orders for prints were placed by plaintiff's

24 ¹ Exhibit 16 is a print from the website at the maximum enlargement offered.
25 There is no evidence as to the precise number of times which a person can 26 enlarge Image 3850. Exhibit I is an enlargement of the image an unstated 27 number of times. That image shows what appears to be a row of windows, but 28 the image has been enlarged to the point that nothing more than the geometry of the windows can be discerned; viz., at this degree of enlargement, nothing else in the image is recognizable. It is of significance that nothing within the residence can be observed.

1 counsel and by plaintiff's neighbor.² Proceeds from the sale of prints of images are 2 donated to the California Coastal Protection Network. Adelman does not earn any profit 3 from the website or the photographs, but he does reimburse himself for the costs 4 associated with taking the photographs and all website expenses.

5 Other photographs depicting plaintiff's residence have previously been 6 published. On March 9, 1998, People magazine published an article concerning 7 plaintiff's relationship with James Brolin; their pictures are the front cover of the 8 magazine. The article includes both text which, inter alia, describes aspects of plaintiff's 9 personal relationship with Brolin, and photographs of each of them with members of 10 their respective families. At page 80 of that issue [Exhibit K, page 31 of the June 23
11 filing in this Court] there is an aerial photograph of the residence taken from the ocean 12 [approximate dimension 2" x 3"]; it is a closer view of a portion of what is depicted in 13 Image 3850 [Exhibit A to the Declaration of Laura Seigle] and reveals some details not 14 readily observable in Image 3850 as the latter image appears before enlargement; see, 15 e.g., Exh. A. Once enlarged, the detail observable for the same subject area does not 16 materially differ between the two images. [Comparing Exhibit K, page 31 with Exhibits 17 11 and 16]

18 Other photographs of the plaintiff's residence have been published by news 19 organizations, with the permission of plaintiff, viz., (a) photographs of her being 20 interviewed in an interior setting [Exhibit L, page 37], (b) aerial photographs of the
22 and (c) two photos taken from the rear yard and showing (1) the rear deck, pool and a 23 portion of the rear elevation of the house and (2) the swimming pool area and garden 24 with a view toward the ocean [Exhibit L, page 36]. Another photograph is of a bathroom

26 ² Plaintiff and her husband have applied for a permit from the City of Malibu in 27 connection with the redevelopment of a portion of their real property. It is 28 reasonable to infer that the neighbor ordered the print to assist him or her with respect to that matter.

1 counter in a residence of the plaintiff. [Exhibit L, page 37]. Exhibit L is a printout from 2 the Internet site barbratimeless.com. [There is no evidence that this site is sanctioned 3 by plaintiff.] The plaintiff herself utilizes the Internet to put her views before the public.
4 She has a website [the address of which is barbarastreisand.com] on which she posts 5 her views on various subjects. [Exhibit Q].

6 Information about the residence is available in the public record. Agenda item 7 4.D of the City of Malibu Planning Commission May 19, 2003 public meeting, consisting 8 of 10 pages, is available on the website for the City of Malibu. It identifies plaintiff and 9 her husband by name as owners of the residence and lists the addresses of plaintiff's 10 residence and other property owned by plaintiff and her husband at the location at issue 11 [Exhibit U]. Page 1 of Exhibit V, also available from the City of Malibu website, lists 12 plaintiff's residence address. Pages 2 and 3 of that exhibit are topographic maps of the 13 area, including plaintiff's residence. Fan websites list the address of the residence 14 depicted in Image 3850 and of other, former residences [Exhibit M].

15 LEGAL ISSUES AND ANALYSIS

16 I. MOTION UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.16

17 A. Defendants' Burden - First Prong Analysis

18 Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16³ [sometimes referred to as the anti-19 SLAPP statute] provides for early judicial review and potential dismissal of litigation that 20 improperly infringes on constitutionally protected activity. A defendant moving to strike 21 a complaint under section 425.16 bears the initial burden to establish that the plaintiff's 22 complaint arises from defendant's exercise of his, her or its First Amendment rights in 23 connection with a public issue. Section 425.16(b)(1); Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29
24 Cal.4th 82, 88, 89; Equilon Enterprises, LLC v. Consumer Cause, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal.4th 25 53, 61; Dixon v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal.App.4th 733, 745 [initial burden is on the 26

27 ³ All subsequent statutory references are to the Code of Civil Procedure unless 28 the text or context indicates otherwise.

1 defendant to establish that his or her conduct arises from a matter of public concern].
2 The moving defendant's initial burden is to establish a prima facie showing of the 3 matters as required by the statute (Chavez v. Mendoza [2001] 94 Cal.App.4th 1083, 4 1087). When that threshold burden is met, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to establish 5 by admissible evidence a probability of prevailing on the merits of the litigation. Section 6 425.16(b)(1); Navellier, supra, at 88; Equilon Enterprises, supra, at 67. The plaintiff's 7 burden is met by stating and substantiating a legally sufficient claim. Wilson v. Parker, 8 Covert, et al (2002) 28 Cal.4th 811, 821; Briggs v. Eden Council (1999) 19 Cal.4th 1106, 9 1123.

10 The reason for the statute is set out in the legislative findings contained in 11 section 425.16(a): "The Legislature finds and declares that it is in the public interest to 12 encourage continued participation in matters of public significance, and that this 13 participation should not be chilled through abuse of the judicial process. To this end, 14 this section shall be construed broadly."

15 The evidence presented in this case, including that summarized in the next 16 several paragraphs, establishes that defendants' conduct of which plaintiff complains 17 consists of acts in furtherance of Adelman's rights of petition or free speech under the 18 United States and California Constitutions in connection with a public issue.

19 Protection of the California coastline is a matter of great public interest, 20 spanning the history of the state, from its admission to the federal Union 153 years ago
21 to the present. Indeed, the right of the people to ownership of, or access to, tidelands 22 originated in Roman law (see discussion in City of Berkeley v. Superior Court ([1980] 26 23 Cal.3d 515, 521). The citizens of each state acquired coastal ownership and access 24 rights upon statehood (Martin v. Waddell [1841] 41 U.S. 367, 410); California acquired 25 ownership of coastal lands upon its admission to the Union in 1850 (Borax Ltd. v. Los 26 Angeles [1935] 296 U.S. 10), and holds those lands in trust for the people (City of Long 27 Beach v. Mansell [1970] 3 Cal.3d 462). Land along the California coastline is subject 28

1 to both federal and state regulation (e.g., by the federal Coastal Zone Management Act
2 [16 U.S.C.A. secs. 1451 et seq.]) and by the California Coastal Act of 1976 (Public 3 Resources Code secs. 3000 et seq.; sometimes referred to as the "Coastal Act") which 4 is itself the successor statutory scheme to the California Coastal Zone Conservation Act 5 of 1972 which was adopted by the voters of this state as an initiative statute at the 1972 6 General Election.

7 The Legislature's findings made in connection with enactment of the Coastal Act 8 in 1976 include the following declarations of legislative purpose:

9 "(a) That the California coastal zone is a distinct and valuable natural resource 10 of vital and enduring interest to all the people and exists as a delicately balanced 11 ecosystem.

12 (b) That the permanent protection of the state's natural and scenic resources is a 13 paramount concern to present and future residents of the state and nation.

14 (c) That to promote the public safety, health, and welfare, and to protect public 15 and private property, wildlife, marine fisheries, and other ocean resources, and the 16 natural environment, it is necessary to protect the ecological balance of the coastal 17 zone and prevent its deterioration and destruction.

18 (d) That existing developed uses, and future developments that are carefully 19 planned and developed consistent with the policies of this division, are essential to the 20 economic and social well-being of the people of this state and especially to working 21 persons employed within the coastal zone."

22 See also Public Resources Code sections 30006 and 30012. The latter section 23 exhorts individuals to become involved in the protection of the coast:

24 "The Legislature finds that an educated and informed citizenry is essential to 25 the well-being of a participatory democracy and is necessary to protect California's finite 26 natural resources.... The Legislature further finds that through education, individuals 27 can be made aware of and encouraged to accept their share of the responsibility for

1 protecting and improving the natural environment.”

2 Section 425.16(e) specifically defines activities protected by the anti-SLAPP 3 statute to include:

4 “ ...

5 (2) any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue 6 under consideration or review by a legislative, executive or judicial body, or any other 7 official proceeding authorized by law; (3) any written or oral statement or writing made 8 in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public 9 interest; (4) or any other conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right 10 of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or 11 an issue of public interest.”

12 A portion of the site depicted in the image which is the focus of this litigation is 13 the subject of a zoning proceeding before an agency of the City of Malibu. The 14 application of the Coastal Act to law within the City of Malibu is the subject of not less 15 than 10 lawsuits [now consolidated into one] on file in this Department (City of Malibu v.
16 California Coastal Commission, et al. No. SS011355). The constitutionality of the 17 Coastal Act is now pending hearing before the California Supreme Court in Marine 18 Forests Society v. California Coastal Commission (2002), reprinted for tracking purposes 19 at 104 Cal.App.4th 1202. In January 2003 the Governor convened an Extraordinary 20 Session of the Legislature to respond to the defects perceived in the Coastal Act by the 21 Third District Court of Appeal in the decision cited, ante.

22 Plaintiff herself opined on her website about environmental concerns on 23 December 10, 2002. (Exhibit Q, page 65.)

24 The image at issue here is one of over 12,200 images of the California coastline 25 which defendants publish in a public forum -- the internet. The coastline depicted in 26 Image 3850, and in the 12,200 images, has been a subject and geographic area of 27 intense public interest for scores of years.

1 This controversy substantiates the aphorism that a picture is worth a thousand 2 words: The particular image at issue is a visual description of an area that includes the 3 subject of the zoning matter now pending before a public agency and which, more 4 generally, is part of an on-going public debate and controversy over (1) the proper 5 scope of regulation of the California coastline, (2) the degree of compliance with 6 governmental regulations affecting this geographic area and subject matter and (3) the 7 proper scope of governmental regulation of this geographic area. The issues extend 8 beyond Image 3850; it is only one of the 12,200 images which Adelman has taken and 9 posted on the website as part of his own interest in this region of the state and in the 10 issues outlined above.

11 The published image clearly meets the requirements of section 425.16(e)(2)⁴; 12 undisputably addresses issues of long-standing and current public interest; is posted in 13 a public forum (section 425.16(e)(3)); and represents the exercise of Adelman's First 14 Amendment rights in connection with a public issue and an issue of public interest. Id.
15 The purpose and function of the photography and its publication on the California 16 Coastal Records Project website are examples of speech protected by the state and 17 federal constitutions. See, e.g., ComputerXpress Inc. v. Jackson (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 18 993, 100 [Internet posting as public forum].

19 Defendants have made a prima facie case that their conduct is within the scope 20 of activities protected by section 425.16(b)(1). A contrary conclusion would be 21 inconsistent with both the language of the statute and the express legislative 22 declaration that the statute shall be construed broadly to protect freedom of speech and 23 the right to petition government and to discuss issues of public interest. Section

26 ⁴ Under this prong, there is no need to separately demonstrate that the writing 27 concerns an issue of public significance. Briggs v. Eden Council, supra, 28 19 Cal.4th at 1109 [issues being considered in an official proceeding have public significance per se].

2 There are several interrelated consequences of the facts of this case. The 3 geographic location of the residences depicted in Image 3850 and the use of that real 4 property are matters of public interest in connection with the management of coastal 5 zone resources and the application of the Coastal Act. That a residence in Image 3850 6 is owned by an environmentally concerned, internationally known personage is relevant 7 in the public discussion of coastal zone issues. E.g., Dora v. Frontline Video (1993) 15 8 Cal.App.4th 536, 546. Plaintiff's proposed modified use of the land is also a matter of 9 public interest "in connection with an issue of public interest". See Montana v. San 10 Jose Mercury News, Inc. (1995) 34 Cal.App.4th 790, 792, 797 [professional football 11 player]; Dora v. Frontline Video, supra, [surfer].

12 B. Plaintiff's Burden - Second Prong Analysis

13 That defendants' activities are within the first prong of section 425.16 does not 14 end the inquiry. Rather, the burden shifts to plaintiff to state and substantiate a legally 15 sufficient claim (Equilon Enterprises LLC v. Consumer Cause, Inc., supra, 29 Cal.4th at 16 67), viz., that plaintiff's claims for relief are legally sufficient and supported by 17 competent, admissible evidence (Dupont Merck Pharmaceutical Co. v. Superior Court, 18 supra, 78 Cal.App.4th 562, 568). Thus, plaintiff in this action must establish that her 19 claim is supported by a prima facie showing of facts that is sufficient to sustain a 20 favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by plaintiff is credited. Wilson v. Parker, 21 Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 Cal.4th 811, 821; see Navellier v. Sletten, supra, 29

23 ⁵ The fact that Image 3850 is available for sale may be relevant to the second 24 prong of the analysis, but not to the first. Newspapers are available for sale in 25 most instances, yet no one would contend that a suit to enjoin publication of an arguably "offensive" [e.g., defamatory] article would fail the first prong anti-SLAPP test because the idea expressed was available for sale at a price.

26 A motion under section 425.16 may be proper even when the defendant 27 seeks a financial advantage. Ludwig v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 28 8, 15 [development of mall with environmental consequences is matter of public interest subject to anti-SLAPP statute].

1 Cal.4th at 87. The test which plaintiff must meet has been characterized as that 2 applicable to motions for summary judgment, viz., the plaintiff's burden in opposing a 3 SLAPP motion is to make a prima facie showing of facts that would support a judgment 4 in plaintiff's favor. Kyle v. Carmon (1999) 71 Cal.App.4th 901, 907. In making this 5 determination, the court considers the pleadings and evidence submitted by the parties, 6 but does not weigh credibility or comparative strength of that evidence. The 7 defendant's evidence is considered in the context of determining if it overcomes that of 8 the plaintiff as a matter of law. Kashian v. Harriman (2002) 98 Cal.App.4th 892, 906.

9 1. *Invasion of Privacy Claims*⁶

10 a. Plaintiff's Contentions

11 Plaintiff's first and second causes of action allege violations of her right to 12 privacy under the California Constitution and the common law by the taking and 13 publication of Image 3850 on defendants' website, alleging that such conduct 14 constituted an intrusion into plaintiff's seclusion (First Cause of Action, Complaint, pars.
15 28-37) and the publication of private facts (Second Cause of Action, Complaint, pars.
16 38-47). Plaintiff also alleges that her general right of privacy under Article I, section 1 of 17 the California Constitution was violated by defendants' conduct (Third Cause of Action, 18 Complaint, pars. 48-57).

19 The factual predicate for these claims is the taking of Image 3850 which plaintiff 20 alleges to be "high resolution pictures of areas of her residence that are not visible to 21 the naked eye" (Complaint, pars. 32 and 42), identifying the property as belonging to 22 plaintiff, showing the location of the property through longitudinal and latitudinal 23 coordinates, and pinpointing the location of the residence on a map. Plaintiff claims a 24 protectable privacy interest in the location of her property and in images of the secluded 25 areas of her home. (Complaint, pars. 29, 39 and 49)

27 ⁶ Plaintiff does not contend that her claim for relief is founded on the federal 28 Constitution. For this reason, discussion of federal cases is limited.

1 b. The California Constitutional Right of Privacy

2 (1) Case law development of a right of privacy under California law.

3 What is now commonly referred to as the right of privacy was given modern 4 voice in an 1890 Harvard Law Review article by Samuel D Warren and Louis D.
5 Brandeis entitled The Right to Privacy (4 Harvard Law Review 193), in which the 6 authors called for judicial creation of a remedy in tort for invasion of privacy. Decrying 7 the publication of “idle gossip” and criticizing the press for “overstepping in every 8 direction the obvious bounds of propriety and of decency”, their article eventually 9 resulted in recognition in California [and in other states and federally] of a right to 10 privacy.⁷

11 California first recognized a right to privacy in 1931 in Melvin v. Reid, 112 12 Cal.App. 285 [known as The Red Kimono case in reference to the movie of that name⁸].
13 After taking note that other jurisdictions had set out no uniform rationale for their 14 decisions either recognizing or refusing to recognize such a right, the court of appeal 15 held:

16 “We find ... that the fundamental law of our state contains provisions which, we 17 believe, permit us to recognize the right to pursue and obtain safety and happiness 18 without improper infringement thereon by others.

19 “Section 1 of article I of the Constitution of California provides as follows: “All

21 ⁷

21 The right to privacy is not recognized in every state, nor is there uniformity in 22 the manner or extent to which this right is recognized among states or under 23 the “penumbra” of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Its 24 scope under California law is more extensive than under federal law. For that 25 reason, reference to federal court decisions is not sufficient to resolution of the 26 issues presented in this case.

25 ⁸

26 The movie “The Red Kimono” was a reenactment of the life of a former prostitute 27 who had been tried for murder seven years earlier, and acquitted. Having become 28 rehabilitated, the plaintiff had married and was leading “an exemplary life”. She alleged that use of her true name in the movie had ruined her new life by revealing her past to her otherwise unaware new friends and associates.

1 men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among 2 which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing and 3 protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.

4 “The right to pursue and obtain happiness is guaranteed to all by the 5 fundamental law of our state. This right by its very nature includes the right to live free 6 from the unwarranted attack of others upon one’s liberty, property, and reputation.” Id., 7 at 291.

8 In sustaining plaintiff Melvin’s right to sue for violation of her right to privacy, the 9 court found that her claim must rest solely on the tort cause of action pleaded; at the 10 same time the court also sustained general demurrers to the other causes of action [for 11 violation of asserted property rights].

12 Thus the Melvin court held that Article I, section 1 as it then existed⁹ was the 13 necessary predicate to assertion of a cause of action in tort for violation of the 14 constitutional right to privacy. The court distinguished use of the incidents in plaintiff’s 15 past – which it found not subject to the privacy claim, because those incidents were 16 matters of public record – from use of her name in the movie – which it found actionable 17 as an invasion of her right of privacy. Id., at 292.¹⁰ The Court premised its holding that 18 there was a remedy in tort upon the text of then Article I, section 1, even though there 19 was no need to say more than that the common law — as distinct from the state 20 Constitution — recognized a right to sue in tort for a violation of the right of privacy.

21 The Melvin court’s conclusion that the right to sue for violation of the right of 22 privacy is found in or sanctioned by Article I, section 1 of our state Constitution has not

24 ⁹ The section has been amended to make only one substantive change in the 25 intervening years, by addition of a concluding clause in 1972 consisting of the 26 words “and privacy”. See discussion in the text, post.

27 ¹⁰ Whether the holding itself would be good law today is not relevant to the 28 discussion of the source and scope of the right of privacy. C.f., e.g., Cox Broadcasting v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 494-495 [privilege to publish criminal history information contained in the public records, including names].

1 been uniformly articulated by later cases. The first recognition of the right of privacy by 2 our state supreme court was in Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1952) 38 Cal.2d 273 [Gill I].
3 The plaintiffs in Gill I had filed suit over the use of their photograph [man (actually, 4 husband) kissing woman (in fact, wife) on the cheek in a public place (Farmers Market, 5 Los Angeles], arguing that publication of their photograph violated their right of privacy 6 because it portrayed them in a false light.¹¹ In overruling the trial court's order 7 sustaining the demurrer to the complaint and returning the case to the lower court for 8 trial, our supreme court reasoned:

9 "We believe the reasons in favor of the right [of privacy] are persuasive, 10 especially in the light of the declaration by this court that 'concepts of the sanctity of 11 personal rights are specifically protected by the Constitutions, both state and federal, 12 and the courts have properly given them a place of high dignity, and worthy of especial 13 protection.' (Orloff v. Los Angeles Turf Club, 30 Cal.2d 110, 117 [180 P.2d 321, 171 14 A.L.R. 913]." Gill I, supra, 38 Cal.2d 273, 278.¹² See also Gill v. Hearst Publishing Co.
15 (1953) 40 Cal.2d 224 [Gill II] [that plaintiffs' photograph was taken in a public place 16 precluded the claim made in that case premised on invasion of plaintiffs' privacy rights, 17 apparently under Article I, section 1]. In reaching its conclusion, our supreme court 18 relied also on Melvin v. Reid, supra, 112 Cal.App. 285, suggesting approval of that 19 court's determinations that the constitutional right of privacy would be enforced through 21 ¹¹ California recognizes four theories of common law privacy rights; they are 22 intrusion, public disclosure of private facts, false light, and appropriation of 23 image and personality. Prosser, Privacy (1960) 48 Cal. L. Rev. 381, 24 discussed, e.g., in Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal.3d 20, 35 fn. 16. See 25 discussion in the text, post.

26 ¹² The cited case concerned a claim of violation of the false light prong of the 27 right to privacy. The next year, in Gill v. Hearst Publishing Co., supra, 40 28 Cal.2d 224 [Gill II], discussed in the text, our supreme court held that the same plaintiffs suing a different defendant over the same photograph could not prevail under the invasion of privacy prong of the right to privacy as they had kissed in a public market, a place in which they had no reasonable expectation of privacy.

1 the tort system. It is not entirely clear from the opinions in Gill I and Gill II, however, that 2 plaintiffs' complaints alleged a violation of the state Constitution; rather, it appears that 3 each alleged a cause founded in tort. Thus, whether there was an cause of action 4 based on Article I, section 1 of our state Constitution — independent of a tort claim, 5 rather than permitting a tort cause of action permitted by Article I, section 1 — does not 6 appear to have been presented or determined in either Gill I, Gill II or in Melvin.

7 In Briscoe v. Readers Digest (1971) 4 Cal.3d 529 our supreme court 8 characterized the right of privacy as resting in the common law, not referring to the state 9 constitutional source upon which the Melvin or Gill courts had predicated their 10 recognition of that right. Id., at 534.¹³ While citing Melvin as the basis for its holding 11 and for California's recognition of the right of privacy for 40 years, at the same time the 12 Briscoe court predicated the assertion of a privacy right on common law rather than on 13 Article I, section 1, thus calling into question whether the reasoning of Melvin, Gill I and 14 Gill II (each of which had reached its holding, at least in part, on the authority of Article I, 15 section 1) was being discredited, sub silentio.¹⁴

16 (2) 1972 amendment to the California Constitution

17 Article I, section 1 of the California Constitution now provides:

18 "All people are by nature free and independent and have inalienable rights.
19 Among these are enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, 20 and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety, happiness, and 21 privacy."

22 The text of this section has remained substantively the same since California

23 24 ¹³ The continued viability of Briscoe is before the state supreme court in Gates v.
25 Discovery Communications, No. S115008, reprinted for tracking purposes at 106 Cal.App.4th 677 [review granted June 18, 2003].

26 ¹⁴ That the specific holding of Briscoe v. Readers Digest, supra, may have been 27 overturned, e.g., in Cox Broadcasting v. Cohen, supra, does not detract from 28 the court's discussion of the sources of claims to privacy under the California constitution or statutes.

1 was admitted to the Union in 1850 except for addition of the words "and privacy" by 2 constitutional amendment adopted at the November 1972 General Election. [This 3 revised clause is referred to as the "Privacy Clause" hereafter.] Compare Article I, 4 section 1 as set out in Ex. Doc. No. 39, 31st Congress, 1st Session [Message from the 5 President of the United States regarding California's admission to the Union], with the 6 text of Proposition 11, set out at Part II, page 11, California Voters Pamphlet, November 7 7, 1972 General Election. The reasons for the addition of the Privacy Clause to our 8 state Constitution are set out in Part I, at pages 26 through 28 of that Voters Pamphlet.
9 The Detailed Analysis by the Legislative Counsel states that adoption of Proposition 11 10 would "add the right of privacy as one of the inalienable rights". It should be noted that 11 the Constitution Revisions Commission had not recommended addition of the Privacy
12 Clause.¹⁵

13 The statement of legislative purpose just quoted may not as broad as would first 14 appear. The Argument in Favor of this proposed constitutional amendment additional 15 states in part:

16 "The right of privacy is the right to be left alone. It is a fundamental and 17 compelling interest. It protects our homes, our families, our personalities, our freedom 18 of communion, and our freedom to associate with the people we choose. It prevents 19 government and business interests from collecting and stockpiling unnecessary 20 information about us and from misusing information gathered for one purpose in order 21 to serve other purposes or to embarrass us. [Par.] Fundamental to our privacy is the

23 ¹⁵ While the working papers of the subcommittee of the California Constitution 24 Revision Commission which addressed this article of the Constitution 25 contain a suggestion that a formal statement of the right of privacy should 26 be considered by the full Commission, no recommendation to that effect was 27 contained in any report of the Constitution Revision Commission. See, e.g., 28 California Constitution Revision Commission, Proposed Revision 3, Part 1, Introduction, 1970. The insertion of the words "and privacy" was made on the floor of the California Legislature in the course of its passage of the Legislative Constitutional Amendment which was then placed on the ballot and enacted by the electorate in 1972.

1 ability to control circulation of personal information. This is essential to social 4 lives.....”¹⁶ [Underscoring in original]

5 _____
6 ¹⁶ The October 1969 Staff Report to the California Constitution Revision
7 Commission contains the following brief statement of the right:

8 “Rights of privacy have become quite important in modern American 9 jurisprudence. Such rights are designed to protect the individual from an 10 unwanted invasion of his [or her] private life. Section 1 [of the California 11 Constitution] has been construed as assuring rights of privacy 12 independent of common rights of property, contract, reputation and 13 physical integrity. Rights of privacy, however, do not protect an 14 individual from publication of matter which is of ‘public or general 15 concern.’” Id., at 8 [footnotes omitted].

16 Among the “revision issues” specified in that report was:

17 “2. Should additional rights be specified in Section 1, for example the 18 right to privacy?” Staff Report, Article I, Declaration of Rights, 19 Background Study 3, California Constitution Revision Commission, 20 October, 1969, at 9.

21 At the time of this Report, Article I, Section 1 of the California Constitution 22 provided:

23 “All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable 24 rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; 25 acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and pursuing and 26 obtaining safety and happiness.”

27 It does not necessarily follow, however, that this staff report was the basis 28 for the Legislative Constitutional Amendment proposed, or for its adoption.
It is quoted to indicate the uncertainty extant at the time of adoption of the Privacy Clause.

The Commission’s proposal to revise this section of the Constitution did not include addition of the words “and privacy”. That addition was made by the Legislature when it placed Proposition 11 on the 1972 General Election ballot.
As proposed by the Commission, the section would have been amended to read as follows:

“Every person is free and independent and has inalienable rights.

1 It is established that ballot arguments may be useful in interpreting the intent of 2 the electorate in enacting changes in the state Constitution. E.g., White v. Davis (1975)
3 13 Cal.3d 757, 775; Lundberg v. Superior Court (1956) 46 Cal.2d 644, 652.

4 The ballot argument, however, mentions only in passing the individual's right to 5 be left alone -- except in the context of collection and dissemination of personal 6 information by governments and businesses. There is no language such as that quoted 7 earlier from either cases or the Brandeis and Warren law review article articulating the 8 need for a remedy to protect any privacy interest in the sense of protecting against the 9 invasion of solitude.

10 (3) Development of case law following addition of explicit privacy language

11 In its first discussion of the right to privacy after the electorate adopted the 12 Legislative Constitutional Amendment adding the words "and privacy" to Article I, 13 section 1 of our Constitution, our supreme court applied the Privacy Clause to 14 information gathering by a governmental agency, doing so as an additional, or 15 secondary, basis for its holding. The court's primary holding was that undercover police 16 surveillance and intelligence gathering significantly affected the free exchange of ideas 17 in a university setting, constituting a prima facie violation of the First Amendment to the 18 United States Constitution. On this basis the court reversed the trial court's sustaining

20 Among these are enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, 21 possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety 22 and happiness." Proposed Revision of the California Constitution, 1971, 23 Part 5, California Constitution Revision Commission.

24 As proposed by the Legislature and adopted by the voters, Section 1 was 25 amended to read:

26 " All people are by nature free and independent, and have certain 27 inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life 28 and liberty; acquiring, possessing and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety, happiness, and privacy."

The section was amended without substantive change in 1974.

1 of the defendant police chief's demurrer to a complaint that had challenged undercover 2 police activity on a university campus. White v. Davis, supra, 13 Cal.3d 757. As an 3 additional basis for its ruling the court held that the activity alleged in the complaint also 4 violated Article I, section 1 as then recently modified. The court described the rights 5 protected under Article I, section I as follows: "Although the general concept of privacy 6 relates, of course, to an enormously broad and diverse field of personal action and 7 belief, the moving force behind the new constitutional provision was a more focused 8 privacy concern, relating to the accelerating encroachment on personal freedom and 9 security caused by increased surveillance and data collection activity in contemporary 10 society. The new provision's primary purpose is to afford individuals some measure of 11 protection against this most modern threat to personal privacy." White v. Davis, supra, 12 13 Cal.3d 757 at 773 - 774 [footnote omitted]. Thus, the court confirmed that the focus 13 of the Privacy Amendment was information gathering by government agencies, one of 14 the matters expressly addresses in the Arguments in Favor in the ballot pamphlet for the 15 1972 General Election. No mention was made of any other reason for adoption of the 16 amendment or of any broader scope of protection provided by the Privacy Clause.

17 The court also held that "... the amendment is intended to be self-executing, i.e., 18 that the constitutional provision, in itself, "creates a legal and enforceable right of 19 privacy for every Californian." White v. Davis, supra, at 775. Accordingly, the case 20 stands for the proposition that there is a right outside of tort which may be enforced to 21 the extent of the protection provided for in Article I, section 1 of our state Constitution.
22 The case contains no citation to Melvin v. Reid, supra, or to either Gill I or Gill II.

23 The scope of this state constitutional right of privacy was addressed more 24 recently and more directly in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Association (1994) 7 25 Cal.4th 1 in which the Court confirmed that Article I, section 1 "creates a right of action 26 against private as well as governmental entities." Id., at 20. The Hill court also had 27 occasion to consider the scope of application of this constitutional provision, concluding 28

1 that the Privacy Clause addressed two general classes of interests: (1) information 2 privacy — an “interest in precluding the dissemination or misuse of sensitive and 3 confidential information”, and (2) autonomy privacy — an “interest in making intimate 4 personal decisions or conducting personal activities without observation, intrusion, or 5 interference”. Id., at 35.¹⁷ Describing informational privacy as “the core value” furthered 6 by the Privacy Clause, the court reasoned that “a particular class of information is 7 private when well-established social norms recognize the need to maximize individual 8 control over its dissemination and use to prevent unjustified embarrassment or 9 indignity.” Id., at 35. Autonomy privacy addresses the safeguarding of certain intimate 10 and personal decisions from government interference; by reference to federal 11 constitutional tradition these rights implicate medical treatment and private consensual 12 conduct. Id., at 31, 35.

13 Review of the cases which have considered privacy claims indicates both the 14 current state of the law governing Privacy Clause claims and the circuitous route which 15 lead to this status. As will be discussed, post, that path indicates that, while it is 16 established that individuals may sue for relief not only in tort, but predicated upon 17 allegations of violation of constitutionally created rights, and not just against 18 governmental actions, but private conduct as well, the scope of claims which may be 19 redressed by the Privacy Clause is not wide-reaching. This restriction on such claims 20 will have specific application to the Third Cause of Action alleged in this case.

21 (4) Elements of a Privacy Clause claim

23 ¹⁷ In his dissent in Hill, the late Justice Stanley Mosk describes three rather than 24 two types of privacy interests protected by the Privacy Clause:

- 25 1. Informational privacy, which addresses the right to prevent another 26 from obtaining or publishing private information;
- 27 2. Autonomy privacy, which protects against interference with private 28 conduct; and
3. Privacy in the sense of protecting against the invasion of solitude.

Hill v. NCAA, supra, at 90-91.

The majority in Hill does not address this third category.

1 To prevail on a claim under the Privacy Clause a plaintiff must establish: (1) a 2 legally protected privacy interest, (2) a reasonable expectation of privacy in the 3 circumstances, and (3) conduct by the defendant constituting a serious invasion of that 4 privacy interest. Hill, supra, at 39-40.

5 The legally protected privacy interest must be one protected by "established 6 social norms" and determined by reference to "common law development, constitutional 7 development, statutory enactment and the ballot arguments" surrounding adoption of 8 the Privacy Clause. Hill, supra, at 36. These sources include the Restatement Second, 9 Torts, discussed in the text, post.

10 The privacy interest to be protected must be reasonable; it "is not independent of 11 the circumstances [citation omitted]. Even when a legally cognizable privacy interest is 12 present, other factors may affect a person's reasonable expectation of privacy." Id., at 13 36. The invasion must be serious: "No community could function if every intrusion into 14 the realm of private action, no matter how slight or trivial, gave rise to a cause of action 15 for invasion of privacy. 'Complete privacy does not exist in this world except in a desert, 16 and anyone who is not a hermit must expect and endure the ordinary incidents of the 17 community life of which he [or she] is a part.'" Id., at 37, quoting Rest.2d Torts, sec.
18 652D, comment c.

19 Whether the first requirement of this constitutionally sanctioned claim for relief is 20 present is a question of law to be decided by the court. The second and third 21 requirements are mixed questions of law and fact; if the undisputed material facts show 22 no reasonable expectation of privacy or an insubstantial impact on privacy interests, the 23 question of invasion may be determined as a matter of law. The Hill court also 24 recognized certain defenses (and countervailing interests which the plaintiff may assert 25 to offset those defenses). Either negating one of the three elements of the cause of 26 action, or establishing that the invasion is justified because it furthers a countervailing 27 interest, defeats the plaintiff's claim. Hill, supra, at 35-36.

1 Finally, whether this constitutional privacy right has been violated is determined 2 according to a balancing or weighing of applicable factors, rather than requiring the 3 existence of a compelling interest. Id., at 56 [see concurring opinion of Kennard, J] Hill, 4 supra, at 34; American Academy of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal.4th 307, 329, 5 331.

6 That a plaintiff alleging violation of her or his state constitutional right to privacy 7 bears the burden of establishing these three “threshold elements” was reaffirmed in 8 Loder v. City of Glendale (1997) 14 Cal.4th 846, 893 [drug testing of newly hired 9 employees not violative of Article I, section 1]. As explained by the court in Loder, “...
10 the court in Hill determined that it was appropriate to articulate several threshold 11 elements that may permit courts to weed out claims that involve so insignificant or de 12 minimus an intrusion on a constitutionally protected privacy interest as not even to 13 require an explanation or justification by the defendant.” Loder v. City of Glendale, 14 supra, 14 Cal.4th at 893.

15 Finally, as suggested by the case law discussion, ante, the scope of the 16 constitutional right of privacy is not identical to the right of privacy which has developed 17 under the common law. In Shulman v. Group W. Productions, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal.4th 18 200, the court discussed the relationship between the constitutional Privacy Clause and 19 the common law, stating: “Nothing in Hill [or in more recent constitutional privacy cases] 20 ... suggests that the conceptual framework developed for resolving privacy claims under 21 the California Constitution was intended to supplant the common law tort analysis or 22 preclude its independent development.” Id. at 227. The court made this determination 23 notwithstanding the common principles which are among the sources for explication of 24 both constitutional and common law rights, i.e., established social norms, common law 25 development and statutory enactments. See Hill, supra, at 36 - 37.

26 c. The California Common Law Right of Privacy

27 California common law recognizes four categories of the right of privacy. Dean 28

1 Prosser has enumerated these categories as:

- 2 (1) intrusion
- 3 (2) public disclosure of private facts;
- 4 (3) false light in the public eye; and
- 5 (4) appropriation.

6 Prosser, Law of Torts 3rd Ed. 1964, pp. 829-851, cited in Kapellas v. Kofman 7 (1969) 1 Cal.3d 20, 35, fn. 16.

8 Plaintiff's complaint alleges violations of the common law privacy interests of 9 freedom from intrusion (First Cause of Action) and public disclosure of private facts 10 (Second Cause of Action). The elements of these torts are discussed in the following 11 paragraphs.

12 (1) Intrusion into seclusion

13 The tort of intrusion into seclusion recognizes both the right to control access to 14 private places and that there should be a remedy for affronts to the right to be left alone.

15 Neither this right to be left alone, nor the wrong for which the tort principle 16 provides a remedy, is absolute. Thus, proof of a claim for intrusion into seclusion 17 requires proof of two elements: "(1) intrusion into a private place, conversation or matter 18 (2) in a manner highly offensive to a reasonable person." Sanders v. American 19 Broadcasting Co., supra, 20 Cal.4th 907, 914; Shulman v. Group W Productions, supra, 20 (1998) 18 Cal.4th 200, 231.¹⁸ The intrusion must be intentional (Shulman, supra, at 21 231, citing Miller v. National Broadcasting Co. (1986) 187 Cal.App.3d 1483 at 1482) and 22 the plaintiff must establish that the defendant "penetrated some zone of physical or

23 24 ¹⁸ Restatement Torts 2nd, section 652B provides:
25 "One who intentionally intrudes, physically or otherwise, upon the solitude 26 or seclusion of another or his private affairs or concerns, is subject to liability to the other for invasion of his privacy, if the intrusion would be highly offensive to a reasonable person."

27 Our supreme court relied on the Restatement definition in both Shulman, and 28 in Sanders [both discussed in the text, ante].

1 sensory privacy surrounding, or obtained unwanted access to data about, the plaintiff.
2 The tort is proven only if the plaintiff had an objectively reasonable expectation of 3 seclusion or solitude in the place, conversation or data source.” [citations omitted].
4 Shulman v. Group W Productions, Inc., supra, 18 Cal.4th 200, 231-232.¹⁹

5 The tort is not automatically established or negated based on the location at 6 which the allegedly offending conduct occurred. Even the fact that a location is public 7 does not necessarily preclude a determination that a plaintiff’s privacy had been 8 violated. This point is illustrated by Sanders v. American Broadcasting Companies, 9 supra, 20 Cal.4th 907, in which the plaintiff sued ABC and its reporter, alleging the 10 defendants had surreptitiously eavesdropped on plaintiff and recorded assertedly 11 confidential conversations held in plaintiff’s workplace. It was alleged that the 12 videotaping in which the defendants had engaged constituted the tort of invasion of 13 privacy by intrusion. Our supreme court formulated the relevant question in the 14 following language: “May a person who lacks a reasonable expectation of complete 15 privacy in a conversation because it may be seen and overheard by coworkers (but not 16 the general public) nevertheless have a claim for invasion of privacy by intrusion based 17 on a television reporter’s covertly videotaping of that conversation?” Id., at 914. The 18 court explained that the expectation of privacy need not be absolute or complete; rather, 19 the question to be resolved is whether the activity “penetrated some zone of physical or

21 ¹⁹ In advocating the creation of a remedy for invasion of this interest, Warren and Brandeis wrote in their 1890 Harvard Law Review article:

22 “The common law has always recognized a man’s house as his castle, 23 impregnable, often, even to its own officers engaged in the execution of its commands. Shall the courts thus close the front entrance to constituted 24 authority, and open wide the back door to idle or prurient curiosity?” 4 Harv.
L. Rev. 220.

25 Even while so eloquently arguing for recognition of a cause of action for 26 privacy, they placed several limitations on such claims, including when the publication is of matter of “public or general interest” and when the individual 27 has consented to publication of such facts. 4 Harv L. Rev. 214, 218. Such 28 limitations are discussed in the text, post.

7 The determinations of [a] whether the place intruded upon is private and [b] 8 whether the intrusion is in a manner highly offensive to a reasonable person may be

14 (2) Publication of private facts

15 The tort of invasion of privacy by publication of private facts requires that the 16 plaintiff establish all of the following elements: (1) there must be public disclosure (2) of 17 a private fact (3) which would be offensive and objectionable to the reasonable person 18 and (4) which is not of legitimate public concern. Shulman v. Group W. Productions, 19 Inc., supra, 18 Cal.4th 200, 214; citing with approval Diaz v. Oakland Tribune (1983)
20 139 Cal.App.3d 118, 126. The absence of any of the four elements is sufficient to bar 21 the claim. Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal.App.3d 1420, 1428.

22 The Restatement, Second of Torts, at Sections 652A-652E, cited with approval 23 in Shulman, supra, 18 Cal.4th at 215, articulates the applicable standard in the following 24 language: “One who gives publicity to a matter concerning the private life of another is 25 _____

26 ²⁰ The rule that offensiveness is subject to a preliminary determination as a 27 matter of law by the trial court was recently reaffirmed in Marich v. MGM/UA
28 Telecommunications, Inc. (2003) ___ Cal.App.4th ___; 2003 WL 22708668 (November 18, 2003) [not yet final; this decision is not based on that case].

1 subject to liability to the other for invasion of privacy, if the matter publicized is of a kind 2 that ...[a] would be highly offensive to a reasonable person and [b] is not of legitimate 3 concern to the public..." Rest.2d, Torts, section 652D.

4 "... [T]he claim of a right of privacy is not "so much one of total secrecy as it is of 5 the right to define one's circle of intimacy - to choose who shall see beneath the 6 quotidian mask." Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn., supra, 7 Cal.4th 1, 25, 7 quoting Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Association, Inc., supra, 4 Cal.3d 529, 534.
8 Information disclosed to a few people may remain private. Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior 9 Court, supra, 198 Cal.App.3d 1420, 1427.

10 The fourth element of this tort incorporates the requirement that the plaintiff 11 establish that the matter not be of legitimate public concern. "...[U]nder California 12 common law the dissemination of truthful, newsworthy material is not actionable as a 13 publication of private facts." [citations omitted] Shulman v. Group W Productions, supra, 14 18 Cal.4th at 215; Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc., supra, 139 Cal.App.3d 118, 129-131.

15 While, generally, whether a matter is of legitimate public concern, whether it is 16 newsworthy, is a question of fact (Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc., supra, at 133), the 17 circumstances of the particular case may provide for this determination to be made as a 18 matter of law. E.g., Wasser v. San Diego Union (1987) 191 Cal.App.3d 1455. Material 19 is newsworthy if it meets a three-part test which weighs (1) the social value of the facts 20 published, (2) the depth of the intrusion into ostensibly private affairs, and (3) the extent 21 to which the individual voluntarily acceded to a position of public notice. Kapellas v.
22 Kofman, supra, 1 Cal.3d at 36. As our supreme court points out, "[i]f information 23 reported has previously become part of the 'public domain' or the intrusion into an 24 individual's private life is only slight, publication will be privileged even though the social 25 utility of the publication is minimal. (Citation omitted)." Id.

26 There are two types of public figures: "The first is the 'all purpose' public figure 27 who has 'achieve[ed] such pervasive fame or notoriety that he [or she] becomes a 28

1 public figure for all purposes and in all contexts.' The second category is that of the 2 'limited purpose' or 'vortex' public figure, an individual who 'voluntarily injects himself [or 3 herself] or is drawn into a particular public controversy and thereby becomes a public 4 figure for a limited range of issues.' "[Citation omitted] Thus, one who undertakes a 5 voluntary act through which he [or she] seeks to influence the resolution of the public
6 issues involved is a public figure." Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 7 Cal.3d 244, 253, quoting Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc. (1984) 418 U.S. 323; as quoted in 8 Sipple v. Foundation For Nat. Progress (1999) 71 Cal.App.4th 226, 247.

9 Plaintiff in this action is an "all purpose public figure"; she alleges as much in the 10 first paragraph of the complaint. See also Sipple v. Foundation for National Progress, 11 supra, 71 Cal.App.4th at 247-248; Maheu v. CBS, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal.App.3d 662, 675;

14 d. Application of relevant legal principles to the facts

15 (1) The claims in general

16 Plaintiff's claims that her privacy has been violated present certain common 17 issues, issues which overlap the allegations based on the California Constitution and on 18 the common law. Both bases for relief are discussed in the next several sections in the 19 context of, first, those bases applicable to the claims generally, and second, those 20 bases applicable to particular claims.

21 (A) Consent

22 Consent may bar a plaintiff's privacy claim in the particular case whether the 23 claim is based on the Privacy Clause or in tort. One who consents to an act is not 24 wronged by it. Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharmaceuticals (2001) 86 Cal.App.4th 365, 37; 25 citing Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn., supra, 7 Cal.4th at 26; Civ. Code §3515.
26 To prevail on a claim of invasion of privacy a plaintiff must not have consented to the 27 invasion. Gill II, supra, 40 Cal.2d at 230 [engaging in the alleged conduct in a public 28

1 place]; Aisenson v. American Broadcasting Co. (1990) 220 Cal.App.3d 146, 162 2 [photograph of public figure taken on public street].

3 In this case plaintiff previously consented to publication of photographs of her 4 property, including but not limited to the area depicted in Image 3850. Substantially 5 similar views of the same rear yard were extant on the Internet and in other publications 6 at the time Image 3850 was taken and posted on defendants' website; the images in the 7 People magazine article having been available since spring 1989. These widely 8 available images include interior as well as exterior photographs, all of a quality equal 9 to or better than Image 3850, albeit smaller in size. Nor is there any basis in fact for the 10 allegation that Image 3850 as displayed on defendants' website permits viewing the 11 interior of plaintiff's residence, or that additional enlargement of this image will enable a 12 person to see anything recognizable inside the residence.

13 The republication of something already made public is not actionable as an 14 intrusion; the simple fact is that the 'bell cannot be unrung' in such circumstances: The 15 right to withdraw consent terminates with [first] publication. Virgil v. Time, Inc. (9th Circ.
16 1975) 527 Fed.2d 1122, 1127 [withdrawal of consent to disclosure of private facts prior 17 to publication]; nor is it actionable as the disclosure of a "private fact". Falona by 18 Fredericson v. Hustler Magazine, Inc. (5th Circ. 1986) 799 Fed.2d 1000, 1006.²¹

19 (B) Objectively reasonable belief in the privacy interest to be protected

20 Both constitutional and common law claims are founded on the objectively 21 reasonable nature of the belief in the privacy of the interest alleged to have been 22 violated. In the present case, this includes an objectively reasonable belief that the 23 taking of the digital image invaded plaintiff's seclusion as well as that publication of 24 Image 3850 breached objective, reasonably held, privacy standards.

25 No such objectively reasonable beliefs are presented on the facts of this case.

26
27 ²¹ There is no meritorious allegation of any violation of plaintiff's right of publicity 28 in Image 3850.

1 As the Restatement 2d, Torts, points out: "Complete privacy does not exist in 2 this world except in a desert, and anyone who is not a hermit must expect and endure 3 the ordinary incidents of the community life of which he [or she] is a part." Rest.2d Torts, 4 sec. 652D, comment c. As discussed, ante, the principles articulated in the 5 Restatement 2d, Torts, are implemented through California tort law and the Privacy 6 Clause.

7 Occasional overflights are among those ordinary incidents of community life of 8 which plaintiff is a part. The taking of photographs in picturesque, coastal areas is a 9 similarly routine activity.

10 Nor is there merit in the contention that the image is objectionable because a 11 person passing at street level could not see what is revealed in this image. Plaintiff has 12 taken no steps to preclude persons passing by in airplanes from seeing into her back 13 yard. As just indicated, aerial views are a common part of daily living; there is nothing 14 offensive about the manner in which they occur, nor in the manner in which this 15 particular view was obtained.

16 In support of her contention that she has the right to bar the uninvited from 17 viewing her back yard from any vantage point, not just from ground level, and from 18 disseminating Image 3850, plaintiff asks that the court apply the doctrine which protects 19 a homeowner from trespass within the curtilage. The term "curtilage" defines the areas 20 adjacent to the home "associated with the 'sanctity of [the] home and the privacies of 21 life'" (Oliver v. U.S. (1984) 466 U.S. 170, 180, quoting Boyd v. U.S. (1886) 116 U.S.
22 616, 630) "where privacy rights are most heightened" (California v. Ciraolo (1986) 476 23 U.S. 207, 212) and is used in jurisprudential analysis of the reasonableness of 24 governmental intrusions under the Fourth Amendment rather than privacy claims arising 25 under other laws. Although the law of trespass has "little or no relevance to the 26 applicability of the Fourth Amendment" (Oliver v. United States, supra, 466 U.S. at 27 184), assuming, arguendo, application of federal Fourth Amendment principles to these 28

1 state constitutional and common law questions²², the doctrine does not support
2 plaintiff's claim on these facts. In California v. Ciraolo, supra, the United States
3 Supreme Court held to be objectively reasonable and constitutional the warrantless 4 aerial search of the curtilage of the defendant's home, a rear yard surrounded by a 10 5 foot high fence, reasoning in part that the observations took place from navigable 6 airspace at an altitude of 1,000 feet, while flying directly over the residence. Law 7 enforcement personnel used both their unaided eyes and a 35 mm camera in the 8 overflight.

9 In finding that the search was objectively reasonable notwithstanding the 10 purposeful and specific overflight and the use of a camera, and even though the 11 defendant had fenced in the rear yard to a height above that at which a person could 12 peer, unaided, into the curtilage of the residence, the court reasoned: "In an age where 13 private and commercial flight in the public airways is routine, it is unreasonable for 14 respondent to expect that his marijuana plants were constitutionally protected from 15 being observed with the naked eye from an altitude of 1,000 feet. The Fourth 16 Amendment simply does not require the police traveling in the public airways at this 17 altitude to obtain a warrant in order to observe what is visible to the naked eye.
18 California v. Ciraolo, supra, at 1813 - 1814. California state courts have upheld such

20 ²² The application of federal Fourth Amendment principles to federal First 21 Amendment or state Article I, section 1 privacy concerns need not be resolved 22 as, even under cases applying those principles, plaintiff cannot meet her 23 burden on the second prong of the section 425.16 analysis. It is interesting to 24 note in this regard the analysis employed by the author of the lead opinion in 25 People v. Mayoff, supra, 42 Cal.3d 130, as the facts presented there arose 26 prior to adoption of Article I, section 28(d) of the state Constitution.
27 (Enactment of that constitutional amendment would thereafter require 28 application of federal Fourth Amendment analysis to state search and seizure cases.) Thus, as one of the final applications of the doctrine of independent state grounds to search and seizure cases, the lead opinion in Mayoff supports the conclusion reached in the text of this analysis, viz., that the "search" in this case was not unreasonable under the factual circumstances presented under the state Constitution.

1 aerial surveillances against Fourth Amendment claims in cases both pre- and post-2 dating Ciraolo. E.g., People v. Romo (1988) 198 Cal.App.3d 581 and People v.
3 Messervy (1985) 175 Cal.App.3d 243, 254.

4 "The mere intonation of curtilage, however, does not end the inquiry.... 'What a 5 person knowingly exposes to the public, even in his home or office, is not a subject of 6 Fourth Amendment protection'; hence, views by the police of enclosed backyards from 7 airplanes do not violate the Fourth Amendment because the yard is readily visible to 8 anyone glancing down from an airplane. [Citation omitted.] The visibility of the yard to 9 the public and the routine nature of air flights renders the expectation of privacy 10 unreasonable." U.S. v. Hedrick (7th Circ. 1991) 922 Fed.3d 396, 399.

11 Neither party has cited a case applying the curtilage doctrine to civil trespass or 12 to privacy claims.²³ Assuming the application of that doctrine in this case, its use 13 would turn on principles similar to those articulated in the previously-referenced 14 sections of the Restatement of Torts, 2d, and would bar relief to plaintiff.²⁴

15 Reasonableness of belief in this context is dependent in significant part on the 16 offensiveness of the conduct in which the defendants engaged. For plaintiff to prevail 17 on the second prong analysis she must also establish that the intrusion was made in a 18 manner highly offensive to a reasonable person. Shulman v. Group W Productions, 20 ²³ California has also repudiated the old common law doctrine of ownership of 21 the sky. Flight is lawful if in compliance with federal height restrictions or 22 unless the flight is at such a low height that it is dangerous. Civil Code section 659; Public Utilities Code sections 21402, 21403.

23 ²⁴ Reliance should not be placed on other principles, such as the common law 24 of trespass. "The law of trespass ... forbids intrusions upon land that the 25 Fourth Amendment would not proscribe. For trespass law extends to 26 instances where the exercise of the right to exclude vindicates no legitimate 27 privacy interest." [Footnotes omitted] Oliver v. U.S., supra, 466 U.S. 170 at 28 pp.183-184. In Footnote 15 of that opinion, the court points out the invalidity of applying the law of trespass for the reason that "... the common law of trespass furthers a range of interests that have nothing to do with privacy...."

1 Inc., supra, 18 Cal. 4th at 231; see Wilkins v. National Broadcasting Co. (1999) 71
2 Cal.App.4th 1066, 1078. In analyzing the offensiveness of the intrusion the trier of fact 3 must consider “the degree of the intrusion, the context, conduct and circumstances the 4 intrusion as well as the intruder’s motives and objectives, the setting into which he 5 intrudes, and the expectations of those whose privacy is invaded.” Deteresa v.
6 American Broadcasting Cos. (9th Circ. 1997) 121 Fed.3d. 460, 465. “It is unreasonable 7 for persons on the ground to expect that their curtilage would not be observed from 8 [1,000 feet].” Florida v. Riley (1989) 488 U.S. 445, 452-453 (O’Connor, J., concurring).

9 In the instant case, there is insufficient evidence to present the case to a jury.
10 Under the first required element, it is the character of the photograph which defines the 11 nature of the intrusion. At its most detailed, the photograph at issue reveals no truly 12 private place. While passers-by at street level cannot see into the back yard, the aerial 13 view is distant, if not remote — Image 3850 is a depiction of the coastline with adjacent 14 houses, yards, recreational facilities and streets — and not a peering into this plaintiff’s 15 private residence or private residential area; no persons can be recognized in the image 16 even when the image is enlarged. Were persons recognizable, the matter might well 17 deserve presentation to a jury. On these facts, it does not.

18 Nor are there are facts which support a finding that defendant Adelman acted in 19 a manner “highly offensive to a reasonable person.” It is undisputed that he was 20 engaged in his avocation of photographing the California coastline for an ecological 21 history project and did not take Image 3850 with any other purpose in mind. This 22 activity does not meet the necessary threshold. The posting of Image 3850 on 23 defendant Adelman’s website was done with the same purpose; when it was done, it too 24 was not done in a manner highly offensive to a reasonable person. As it is maintained, 25 it is protected by well-established principles discussed, post.

26 Plaintiff also contends that the presence of the label “Streisand Estate, Malibu” 27 on Image 3850 is an independent basis for liability. This contention is without merit.
28

1 The label is not searchable, except once a person has already reached the defendants' 2 website and the evidence is that only 6 copies of Image 3850 had been sold, two to 3 counsel for plaintiff and another to the possessor of the adjacent real property. This 4 evidence indicates that the label merely states that which is widely known and what 5 plaintiff herself previously permitted to be disseminated. The claim is de minimus and 6 does not provide a sufficient basis for plaintiff to meet the test required of her at this 7 stage of the litigation. Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn., supra, 7 Cal.4th 1. It 8 may be irritating to plaintiff, but no objective person can reasonably conclude that 9 maintaining the label meets the requisite "highly offensive" standard. To the extent that 10 a contrary result is suggested by the circumstances, the newsworthiness of the 11 information far outweighs any claim of misappropriation. Cf. Civil Code section 3344(d), 12 discussed, post.

13 The facts also establish that plaintiff consented to the publication in a national 14 magazine of a similar photograph and others.²⁵ Thus, there is no likelihood that plaintiff 15 could establish at trial that the publication was offensive to a reasonable person as 16 plaintiff herself consented to another publication of a similar depiction. [A separate 17 website (barabratimeless.com) contains other photographs of the same scene.
18 Whether these images are posted with plaintiff's consent is not clear from the record.]
19 This conclusion is supported by inspection of the material about which plaintiff objects: 20 As a matter of law, there is nothing private or personal about Image 3850. E.g., 21 Restatement, Torts 2d, sec. 652A.²⁶

23 ²⁵ There is no specific fact in the record with respect to the nation-wide 24 circulation of People magazine; the Court relies on Evidence Code sections 25 452 (g) and (h) for this factual inference.

26 ²⁶ The argument that there are directions on defendants' website is without 27 support; there is only a generalized map of the area of Malibu in which 28 plaintiff's residence is located. The evidence also establishes that her address is otherwise available in the public record and thus not actionable.
E.g., Carafano v. Metrosplash.com, Inc., supra, 207 Fed.Supp.2d at 1070-

1 (C) Summary

2 Plaintiff's argument that the facts support a determination that plaintiff had an 3 objectively reasonable belief that her privacy was invaded is without support in law or 4 policy. This is not a circumstance in which a helicopter hovered over plaintiff's back 5 yard in order to photograph her in that location — whether engaged in some familial 6 activity or merely enjoying her surroundings; nor do the facts even suggest that the 7 helicopter hovered to take close-ups, or any photographs, of plaintiff's yard during a 8 social event, or perhaps when the yard was empty but under circumstances in which the 9 manner of operation of the helicopter constituted a nuisance. Those factual patterns 10 are not presented or even suggested by plaintiff.²⁷

11 Any intrusion on these facts is de minimus; there is no objectively reasonable 12 belief in protection from overflights, from Image 3850, or from the photographs in 13 evidence.

14 e. Specific claims

15 (1) Intrusion into seclusion

16 The tort of intrusion into seclusion focuses on the fact that someone has 17 intruded, and not on the publication of the results of that intrusion, whether the 18 publication is in words, or in images as in this case. Plaintiff's allegations that 19 defendants intruded by (a) viewing and photographing plaintiff's back yard from the air 20 and (b) publishing those images on the world wide web are without support in law or 21 policy.

22 While defendants' conduct may be an intrusion in the broadest sense of the 23

24 1072; affd. (9th Circ. 2003) 339 Fed.3d 1119.

25 ²⁷ That actionable facts are not presented in this case should not lead to the 26 inference that plaintiff is without interim and permanent relief on a different 27 factual showing. E.g., Galella v. Onassis (2d. Circ. 1973) 487 Fed.2d 986 28 [injunction issued against harassing photographer]; Galella v. Onassis (SDNY 1983) 533 Fed.Supp. 1076 [enforcement of prior injunction by contempt].

1 term, it is not an intrusion into a private place as that term is recognized under the legal 2 principles discussed, ante. Nor was the intrusion made in a manner highly offensive to 3 a reasonable person. Air travel is a commonplace of modern society and recreational 4 or purposeful flights over the California coastline are commonplace events that people 5 who chose to live in the area must accommodate. There was no serious invasion in this 6 case; the complaint here is de minimus and fully discounted by the language of the 7 Restatement: "No community could function if every intrusion into the realm of private 8 action, no matter how slight or trivial, gave rise to a cause of action for invasion of 9 privacy." Rest.2d, Torts, sec. 652D, comment c.

10 Nor can plaintiff establish any of the three elements which are conditions 11 precedent for her to prevail under the Privacy Clause. On these facts, there is no legal 12 basis upon which she can be protected from overflights; nor was this invasion serious; 13 nor is there any expectation that the law would find reasonable protection against this 14 overflight or the taking of Image 3850.

15 (2) Publication of private facts

16 While a person has a right to control access to his or her private matters, there is 17 no basis in law for this plaintiff to make that claim with respect to the publication of 18 Image 3850.

19 First, nothing recognized by law as private is disclosed. Image 3850 is no more 20 than a picture of the California coastline taken from a passing aircraft. There is no 21 human presence in the back yard of plaintiff's residence. The image reveals nothing 22 more than a back yard, indeed, many back yards, some of which have swimming pools, 23 others tennis courts, others expansive lawns — all things common to this area of Malibu 24 — and none worthy of more than a passing glance ... save public interest in the fact 25 that this plaintiff's back yard is among those in this image.

26 Second, the fact that it is this plaintiff's back yard that is disclosed is newsworthy, 27 precluding plaintiff from establishing the fourth element of the publication of private facts 28

1 tort. While plaintiff justifiably asserts that there is something different about Image 3850 2 — that it contains an image of plaintiff's back yard and plaintiff's residence, it is the 3 assertion of that contention which establishes additional reasons why her claim is 4 without merit. The image clearly depicts the relationship of plaintiff's property to the 5 California coastline, an area of intense public interest and concern. While that fact is 6 obvious and thus not a private fact, it also is a significant fact when it is recalled that 7 plaintiff is a voluntary public figure who speaks out on environmental issues and has a 8 matter involving her coastal real property pending before a local planning agency.²⁸ 9 The facts that this plaintiff lives where she does and how she conducts herself in 10 relationship to her surroundings, are matters of public interest; they are newsworthy. In 11 the community of ideas the public has the right to the information in Image 3850 as 12 published on defendants' website in considering and evaluating this public figure's 13 public statements. These facts make Image 3850 newsworthy as a matter of law.²⁹

15 ²⁸ It is clear beyond any doubt that plaintiff is a current, voluntary public figure; 16 she alleges this in the first paragraph of her complaint. She has not retired to 17 a life of seclusion from which defendants' activities aroused her. Plaintiff is 18 active in the field of entertainment and as a commentator on current political 19 issues. At argument counsel referred to plaintiff using her residence as the 20 site of a fundraiser for a President of the United States within the last few 21 years. Her own website contains articles attributed to her in which she opines 22 on the environment among other contemporary issues; her statement on the 23 environment bears a date within the last year.

21 Any contention that this plaintiff may recede at will into anonymity and emerge 22 at times she determines, each time with the protections afforded to a 23 temporary public figure is without merit for reasons discussed in the text, ante.

24 ²⁹ The sole element of the private facts tort [set out, ante] which plaintiff can 25 establish is that of public disclosure — actually, republication of images of 26 areas previously disclosed in People magazine and elsewhere. Nor can 27 plaintiff meet her burden of negating the public concern requirement. E.g., 28 Shulman v. Group W. Productions, Inc., supra, 18 Cal.4th at 214; Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court, supra, 37 Cal.3d at 253. The facts are not private and the disclosure is not offensive or objectionable to the reasonable person.

1 The fact that the image is accompanied by a label or tag line “Streisand Estate, 2 Malibu” does not alter this analysis. The identifying label is an element of the 3 newsworthiness of the image and is equally subject to protection.

4 Privacy Clause claims share certain elements with those bottomed on the 5 common law, as discussed, ante. Just as with the invasion claim made under the 6 Privacy Clause, plaintiff cannot meet the threshold requirement to establish a likelihood 7 that she will prevail on a publication of private facts claim based on Article I, section 1.
8 For reasons discussed, ante, there is no basis on which the court may conclude that 9 there is a legally protected privacy interest on the facts presented; nor can plaintiff have 10 had a reasonable expectation that publication of Image 3850 is a serious invasion of her 11 privacy or otherwise entitled to protection.

12 (C) Constitutional claim - the third cause of action

13 In her Third Cause of Action plaintiff alleges that the Privacy Clause itself is a 14 basis upon which she can prevail. While it is a correct statement of law that the scope 15 of the constitutional right of privacy is not identical to the right of privacy which has 16 developed under the common law (e.g., Shulman v. Group W. Productions, Inc., supra, 17 18 Cal.4th at 227), it is equally clear that application of “established social norms” and 18 references to “common law development, constitutional development, statutory 19 enactment and the ballot arguments” (Hill v. NCAA, supra, 7 Cal.4th at 36) compel the 20 conclusion that plaintiff cannot prevail at trial on her separate, Privacy Clause claim.

21 From Melvin v. Reid to contemporaneous cases, no court decision has extended 22 the shield of the Privacy Clause to facts similar to those presented in the instant case.
23 Nor does the policy of the Privacy Clause or the history of its development suggest that 24 a court should do so now. There is neither an informational interest nor an autonomy 25 interest³⁰ presented on these facts; nothing in this case suggests that established social 26

27 ³⁰ As discussed in footnote 17, ante, autonomy privacy (also a concern of the 28 1972 constitutional amendment as well as the subject of pre-1972

1 norms or the Privacy Clause ballot arguments sought to create a private right of action
2 which would extend protection to the facts of this case. Further, any informational 3 interest which is present is de minimus; to the extent it is greater, the disclosures made 4 by defendants are protected as newsworthy with respect to this voluntary public figure.
5 No appellate authority cited be either party or located by the court supports a cause of 6 action predicated on the Privacy Clause and based on the conduct alleged in the 7 complaint filed in this action. Different facts in different case may suggest further 8 analysis, but, on the facts of this case, it is clear as a matter of law that plaintiff cannot 9 prevail on this claim.

10 That Image 3850 is posted on the internet does not change this analysis. The 11 image is unremarkable and ordinary. The fact that it is available worldwide does not 12 change the character of the image. Plaintiff has not cited a case, and the court is not

14 development of our state constitutional doctrine, e.g., Melvin v. Reid, supra, 15 112 Cal.App. 285 and its progeny), “refer[s] to the federal constitutional 16 tradition of safeguarding certain intimate and personal decisions from 17 government interference in the form of penal and regulatory laws” (Hill, supra, 18 at 36) as amplified by our more expansive constitutional provision (e.g., 19 Reynolds v. Superior Court (1974) 12 Cal.3d. 834, 842 [authoritative 20 construction of the California Constitution is a responsibility of our state 21 supreme court which is to be “informed but untrammled by the United 22 States Supreme Court’s reading of parallel federal provisions”].

23 Plaintiff does not allege the violation of any autonomy interest recognized 24 under federal or state law. Such autonomy interests include restrictions on 25 medical procedures (Roe v. Wade [1973] 410 U.S. 113; American Academy of 26 Pediatrics v. Lungren [1997] 16 Cal.4th 307; Conservatorship of Valerie N.
27 [1985] 40 Cal.3d 143, 164); restrictions on state funding of abortions 28 (Committee to Defend Reproductive Rights v. Myers [1981] 29 Cal.3d 252); patient's privacy interest in psychotherapy (People v. Stritzinger [1983] 34 Cal.3d 505, 511); right to live in alternative family arrangements (City of Santa Barbara v. Adamanson [1980] 27 Cal.3d 123); right to familial privacy (Schmidt v. Superior Court [1989] 48 Cal.3d 370, 389-39); polygraph testing of government employees by city (Long Beach City Employees Assn. v. City of Long Beach [1986] 41 Cal.3d 937, 948); right to privacy of financial records (Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court [1975] 15 Cal.3d 652, 656-57; Doyle v. State Bar [1982] 32 Cal.3d 12, 20). Nor does plaintiff establish any basis for expansion of those rights on the facts of this case.

1 aware of any, that holds that newsworthiness is determined in part based on the 2 circulation or readership of the medium or newspaper. Further, as plaintiff has no 3 protectable interest in Image 3850, the breadth of publication of the image is not 4 relevant. There is nothing in the record about the manner in which the image is posted 5 or maintained that suggests that defendants' actions are deserving of sanction under 6 our state constitution.³¹

7 2. Civil Code section 3344

8 Plaintiff contends that Adelman's facilitation of the sale of prints of Image 3850 9 constitutes an unauthorized use of an individual's "name, voice, signature, photograph 10 or likeness, in any manner, on or in products, merchandise or goods" prohibited by Civil 11 Code section 3344(a). In support of this contention plaintiff argues the facts that the 12 website has permitted a caption to be placed adjacent to Image 3850 and that prints of 13 that Image are available for sale — and had done so without plaintiff's consent — 14 constitute violations of this statute.

15 The text and context of Image 3850 are clear — it is an aerial view of a section of 16 the California coastline which includes accurate aerial depiction of plaintiff's residence, 17 including the yard layout and the arrangement of the pool furniture. Enlargements [in 18 the same size; one apparently downloaded by "self-help" and the other purchased 19 through Pictopia.com] of Image 3850 appear as Exhibits 11 and 16. On defendants' 20 website the image is labeled Streisand Estate, Malibu.

21 Subsection (d) of section 3344 provides:

22 "For the purposes of this section, a use of a name, voice, signature, photograph, 23 or likeness in connection with any news, public affairs, or sports broadcast or account, 24 or any political campaign, shall not constitute a use for which consent is required under 25 _____

26 ³¹ Although plaintiff has asserted a potential breach of her security by 27 publication of Image 3850, the image does not reveal anything other than a 28 backyard, foliage and fences. If this were a photograph of a military base, revealing defensive fortifications, the analysis might well be different.

1 subdivision (a).”

2 Adelman took Image 3850 as one of the more than 12,200 images which he 3 collected for publication to document the current condition of the California coastline.
4 That area has been the subject of public interest and a matter of “public affairs” from the 5 date of California’s admission to the Union, and particularly so since the enactment of 6 the Coastal Zone Protection Act of 1972 by the electorate. That public interest
7 continues to this date. Adelman’s taking of the photograph, its labeling with plaintiff’s 8 surname and its publication on defendants’ website are within the public affairs 9 exception of that section. Disclosure that plaintiff owns a residence located in the 10 coastal zone is itself a matter of public interest and within the public affairs exception to 11 section 3344. Plaintiff is clearly a public figure who expresses herself on the Internet on 12 matters of environmental policy. She has a matter of potential impact on the coastal 13 zone pending before a local agency. Posting Image 3850 on the Internet is relevant to 14 plaintiff’s expression of views on environmental matters.³²

15 Further, it is unlikely that plaintiff can meet the requirements of section 3344(a) in 16 any event. That section requires a direct connection between the use of the name and 17 the commercial activity alleged to be objectionable. It is obvious that the identifier was 18 not used to promote sales of prints of Image 3850; the “tag” line is not accessible until a 19 person is already on defendants’ website and the use of the name is descriptive rather 20 than of any significant commercial value. See Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich,

22 ³²

23 While other legal principles could preclude repetitive “flyovers”, had plaintiff been in 24 the backyard at the time of the “flyby” in this case, and even if her image were 25 identifiable as that word is defined by section 3344(b)(1), the public affairs 26 exception would preclude application of the statute to these defendants under the 27 circumstances presented in this case. See, e.g., Montana v. San Jose Mercury 28 News, supra, 34 Cal.App.4th 790 [newspaper’s reproduction of plaintiff football player’s likeness in poster sold to the general public in connection with team winning Super Bowl was a matter within the public interest exception of statute]; Dora v. Frontline Video, supra, 94 Cal.App.4th 536 [use of plaintiff’s name, voice and likeness in surfing video exempt under public affairs exemption].

1 Inc. (1974) 43 Cal.App.3d 880, 894-895.

2 Nor would there be a claim for common law misappropriation. The subject of the 3 image is clearly a matter of public interest for reasons set forth, ante. As such, no
4 common law claim can be established. Montana v. San Jose Mercury News, supra, 34 5 Cal.App.4th at 793 [football player could not maintain action against newspaper which 6 reproduced and sold posters including plaintiff's likeness]; Dora v. Frontline Video, Inc., 7 supra, 15 Cal.App.4th at 542 [self-proclaimed legendary surfer cannot maintain action
8 to prevent sale of video containing his name and likeness]. Nor can plaintiff 9 successfully maintain this statutory action; her worldwide fame makes images of her 10 unadorned and unoccupied back yard newsworthy and of public interest.

11 3. Civil Code section 1708.8

12 Plaintiff's assertion that "[d]efendants are liable for constructive invasion of 13 privacy for using a visual enhancing device in an 'attempt' to photograph Streisand 14 engaging in a 'personal or familial activity' [Opposition to Motion to Strike, page 11, ll.
15 15 - 17], is without factual merit or legal support.

16 Section 1708.8 provides:

17 "(b) A person is liable for constructive invasion of privacy when the defendant 18 attempts to capture, in a manner that is offensive to a reasonable person, any type of 19 visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff engaging in a 20 personal or familial activity under circumstances in which the plaintiff had a reasonable 21 expectation of privacy, through the use of a visual or auditory enhancing device, 22 regardless of whether there is a physical trespass, if this image, sound recording, or 23 other physical impression could not have been achieved without a trespass unless the 24 visual or auditory enhancing device was used."

25 The facts do not support the legal contention asserted: Plaintiff does not appear 26 in Image 3850 and the image is devoid of the "personal or familial activity" which are 27 necessary conditions precedent to application of the statute. Further, there is no 28

1 evidence that any defendant made any attempt to photograph plaintiff. There is no 2 evidence that Adelman knew that it was Streisand's property that he was capturing on 3 his digital camera at the time the image was taken; his focus was on the coastline — 4 almost all 1200+ miles of which he has now photographed for the purpose of making a 5 permanent record of its current condition for his environmental interests. The facts 6 preclude the granting of relief to plaintiff. For similar reasons, posting of Image 3850 on 7 defendants' website cannot constitute a violation of this statute.

8 4. Summary of Part II

9 While defendants have met their burden on the first prong of section 425.16 10 analysis, plaintiff cannot meet her burden on the second prong, viz., she cannot 11 establish a legally sufficient claim or that her claim is supported by a prima facie 12 showing of facts that is sufficient to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence 13 submitted by plaintiff is credited. Accordingly, the special motion to strike is granted.

14 II. DEMURRER FILED BY LAYER42.NET

15 Layer42.net's demurrer is mooted by the foregoing analysis. For that reason it is 16 denied without prejudice to its refiling if circumstances should later make that action 17 appropriate.

18 III. PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

19 The Motion for Preliminary Injunction is mooted by the ruling on defendants' 20 motion under section 425.16. As an independent ground, the motion is denied as the 21 moving party has not introduced facts sufficient to establish that it is likely to prevail on 22 any of its claims at the time of trial. Those facts are analyzed in the context of the 23 applicable law in Section I of this Tentative Ruling and Proposed Statement of Decision, 24 which analysis is incorporated herein.

26 Motion for Attorney's Fees.

27 Section 425.16(c) provides that the prevailing party shall recover attorney's fees.

1 | If the parties are unable to agree on the appropriate amount of fees to be awarded,
2 | defendants should timely file their motions for such fees shortly after the final Statement
3 | of Decision and judgment of dismissal are filed.
