

So long neglected, has lately undergone a complete repair, through the munificent liberality of its present noble proprietor, the Duke of Devonshire. It was an episcopal residence for a considerable period; but in the year 1363 the bishoprick of Lismore was united to the see of Waterford, seven hundred and thirty years after its foundation. Above the town is a fine salmon fishery. Previous to the union it was a borough, returning two members to the Irish parliament. The dispensary and fever hospital are equally supported by subscriptions and county presentments. The court-house is a substantial stone building, where the magistrates assemble for the administration of justice, and sessions are held here in July and October. Lismore, like many other towns in Ireland, has dwindled from its former magnificence and grandeur to comparative insignificance. Fairs are held here on the 25th of May, the 25th of September, and the 12th of November.

LISTOWEL,

IN the county of Kerry, and pleasantly situated on a gentle declivity of the banks of the Feale, is a well-built clean little town, 134 miles south west of Dublin, 17 and a quarter north north east of Tralee, and 33 north of Killarney. The church being built in the centre of a neat square, has an imposing effect, which is increased by the externally neat, yet elegant appearance of the structure, and well proportioned spire. The tithes, which are inappropriate, belong to Thomas Staughton, Esq. of Ballyhorgan. The Catholic chapel, also situate in the square, is a capacious modern building with a handsome simple exterior, well becoming a religious edifice. Here stands an ancient castle, which was the last that stood out for the Lord of Kerry against Queen Elizabeth; it is now in ruins. Fairs are held twice every month. It enjoys a charter for markets on Tuesdays and Saturdays; the principal one is held on the latter of these days. The population may be computed at about 1500.

POST OFFICE, Square.—Post Master, Mr. George Church. The mail for Dublin, &c. through Tarbert, Rathkeale, &c. is despatched at 48 minutes past eight in the morning, and arrives at eight in the morning. The mail for Tralee, Dingle, &c. leaves at 48 minutes past eight, and arrives at eight in the morning.

MACROOM,

A Market, post and fair town in the county of Cork, is one hundred and forty-two miles s. w. of Dublin, eighteen west of Cork, twenty-six south-by-east of Killarney, and forty-four south-east of Tralee. It is pleasantly situated on the river Sullane, one of the upper branches of the Lee, and, from the proximity of bog and mountain, is well supplied with turf. It has a good weekly market, and some respectable dwelling houses; as it is eighteen miles from Cork, and as no town of any note, in this direction, is within a shorter distance, it is well situated as the centre of an extensive neighbourhood. One of the county sessions is held here, a circumstance of some advantage to the place, and of great convenience to this part of the county. The surrounding country is, for the most part interesting, and abounds with the seats of highly respectable and opulent gentry. Macroom is the joint property of the Earl of Bandon, and Robt.

Hedges Eyre, esq, the latter of whom resides at the castle of Macroom, which he has lately repaired and furnished in a style of elegance and taste. This venerable and stately building, the front of which is entirely covered with ivy, is said to have been built seven hundred years ago. The domain, which is in a high state of cultivation, abounds with pleasant walks, and the scenery is much enlivened by the river which glides along the foot of the plantations and castle, and by which the domain is bounded on the right. Macroom possesses a dispensary, and charity schools for the education of the poor. The church is about to be enlarged and repaired; and the Catholic chapel is a large and respectable building with a lofty tower. The town is governed by the resident magistrates. It has a good weekly market on Saturday, and fairs for cattle, &c. every month in the year. The population is estimated at 5,000.
